COUNCIL STRIKES RATE OF 39 MILLS

Council met in special session on Monday evening, Mayor M. P. Graham presiding.

Present — Reeve Boyes and Councillors Roblin, Wilson, Ming, Hartman, Sharp, Paul.

ACCOUNTS.

The following accounts were ordered paid :

| | |
|---|---|
| Harry Vanalstine | $ 5 00 |
| E. J. Pollard | 20 35 |
| D. B. Wilson | 37 04 |

A by-law to define certain areas within the town in which streets shall be watered or oiled was given its several readings, and finally passed. Following is the area which will be either watered or oiled : Newburgh road from Ed. Vine's to the Iron bridge ; Dundas street from the railway bridge to the corporation limits on the west ; Bridge street from Dundas to York street ; Centre street from Ontario to C.N.R. tracks ; Mill street from John to Centre street ; John street from Ontario to G. T. Ry. ; Dundas street from John to G. T. Ry. ; East from Dundas to G. T. Ry. ; Robert from Bridge to Dundas street ; Market square ; Bellevillle road from Thomas to Bridge street. The charges for same will be 5c. per foot frontage for watering, and 8c. per foot for oiling. There will be no double charging, the only chagge being either for watering or oiling.

A by-law was passed respecting the payment of taxes. All taxes are due and payable on August 1st. On and after October 1st a per centage charge of 3 per cent. will be added, and on and after December 1st an additional charge of 2 per cent. will be added, making in all a total per centage of 5 per cent.

The Streets Committee presented a report in reference to certain privileges asked of the town by Mr. E. G. Ingar for improvements to his garage at the corner of Dundas and Robert streets. They recommended the allowing of the building of a stair entrance to basement of building, said entrance to be at least six feet from Dundas street sidewalk ; installing of gasoline tank and pump ; concreting that part of street and Robert street lying between sidewalk and building ; building runway to first floor of building, and also entrance to basement, provided the entrance be properly safeguarded. Mr. Ungar will also furnish the town with a bond as security against any claim for damage should any accident occur because of these constructions.

The report was adopted.

Moved by Coun. Roblin, seconded by Coun. Ming, that permission be given for the installation of gasoline pumps outside the walks and inside the curbs, said installation to be made under the supervision of the Streets Committee and the furnishing of bonds to endemnify the town against damage. Carried.

A by-law to levy the rate necessary for raising the taxes for the year 1921 was given its several readings and finally passed. The rate of taxation was fixed at 39 mills, made up as follows : 25 mills for general purposes, 12½ mills for school purposes, and 1½ mills for local improvement.

LENNOX FAIR NEWS

The donors of special prizes for the County Fair have not been unmindful of the interests of the young people of the county. This is as it should be. The directors want every citizen of the county, young and old, male or female, to feel that they have a personal interest in the institution and hope they will one and all do something to contribute towards its success.

F. W. Smith & Bro. will give three prizes of $5.00, $3.00 and $2.00 for a boys' driving competition. There should be dozens of entries for this prize. The competitors must be boys engaged in farming and under 16 years of age and are to drive a team of agricultural or general purpose horses, the property of the father or guardian of the driver. It is now up to the country boys to make this one of the most interesting and attractive features of the Fair. What finer sight than a procession of lovely teams, driven by the boys of the farming community.

Mr. V. Cowling will give three prizes of $3.00, $1.50 and 50c. respectively for a boys' bicycle race. No boy over fourteen can compete. The distance is once around the track. Every boy who has a bicycle should compete for these prizes. It will mean lots of fun for the boys and amusement for the spectators as well. The boys with wheels can make a big hit if they take advantage of this opportunity to do their part towards adding to the success of the fair.

Mr. Fred Henderson will give two prizes of $3.00 and $2.00 for the best colt under six months, broken to the halter, exhibited by a boy under 12 years of age. The horse always has and always will occupy first place among the domestic animals in the hearts of many people, and the young colt is the greatest favorite. It is hoped that the boys will induce their parents to permit them to exhibit their colts. We must rely upon our citizens in the country to bring in the attractive exhibits. It may mean some inconvenience and expense, but its worth it. Its your affair to help boost your county, so bring along your boys and your colts.

Boys like goats, many of them have goats. Its no trouble to care for them while on exhibition and you may win the Robinson Co. prize of $2.50 for the best exhibition of goats.

Boyle & Son offer a quick-lite lamp valued at $12.50 for the best decorated automobile owned by a farmer. Here is a chance for the boys and girls on the farms. There are no limitations placed upon the decorations. Ribbon, bunting, grain, fruit, tissue paper, anything and everything that will go to make your car look pretty may be used. Why should we not have 20 or 30 competitors ? You cannot each win the prize offered by Boyle & Son, but you can each win the thanks of the directors for helping them in their work.

This important fact should be borne in mind by all. It means nothing in a business way to the directors. They render their services free and devote much time and energy to the fair solely for the public good. They wish every citizen of Lennox and Addington to look upon the fair in the same light ! As a great public enterprise to which everyone should try to contribute something. A large number of decorated cars will produce a grand effect. Start right now to devise some means for decorating your car.

Mr. C. A. Wiseman will give three prizes of $15.00, $10.00 and $5.00 for the best decorated Chevrolet car. This announcement should be sufficient to produce a long procession of handsomely dressed Chevrolets. Mr. Wiseman, in donoting such substantial prizes, is doing his part. It is now open for the Chevrolet owners to do theirs. This exhibit alone should be worth coming to Napanee to see if the car owners will only show the same public spirit as the donor of the prizes.

LIBERAL LEADER'S VISIT TO PICTON

Great interest is being taken in the coming visit to Prince Edward county of Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, the Liberal Leader. Dissatisfaction with the Meighen Government is everywhere manifest except in Parliament, where it would appear that many members are anxious to hold their seats for personal gain. Responsibility is shifted from Borden to Meighen, but the people are not consulted. Only men who can hold their seats are taken into the cabinet. Ability as statesmen is not considered in making cabinet appointments. It is any wonder that the people become restless and disgusted. The Ontario Government is stepping in where the Dominion Government has failed, and has appointed a commission composed of farmers, business men, manufacturers, Wholesalers and industrial workers to inquire into business conditions which are unfilingebut satisfactory. The first necessity is to let the people select a parliament of their own choosing. The Parliament elected in 1917 no longer enjoys the confidence of the people. The cabinet cannot be strengthened because of the Government's inability to carry bye-elections. The Government has been losing ground continually. The voice of the electors being last heard in the constituency of Medicine Hat, where the Government candidate was defeated by 10,000, losing his deposit.

There is no man in Canada better qualified to deal with economic and political questions than Hon. Mackenzie King. The country is looking for relief and the Picton demonstration will no doubt be filled with people from all over the district to hear the Liberal Leader outline his policies in this country if we are to make the most of our opportunity.

POULTRY KEEPING IN TOWN AND COUNTRY.

Poultry Keeping in Town and Country, a bulletin recently issued by the Departments of Agriculture at Ottawa, comiled by the Dominion Poultry Husbandman, deals with every form of poultry keeping, either for home or private consumption or for marketing. It tells how a commencement may be made in a cheap, but encouraging way and the equipment required. It explains the value of feeds, and how $5.00 for the best decorated to feed birds and poultry in summer and in winter. It tells how to select the best individuals and how to care, grade and house the flock, how to deal with the day-old chicks, what methods should be followed in hatching and rearing, and the various methods of marketing and storing. A chapter is devoted to the essentials of success, wherein the value of economy and cleanliness is especially stressed. Turkeys, geese, ducks, guinea fowls and pigeons are included in the term "poultry," and their care and management dealt with. Numerous illustrations of types, houses, runs, coops and packing and shipping, both birds and eggs, are aids to the value and instructiveness of the bulletin.

New Portraiture.

Wyndham Lewis in his "Tyros and Portraits" exhibit at the Leicester Galleries in London has set out to paint the bad side of his sitter's nature, "the devil in him," a word he used in portraiture, has been adopted by Mr. Lewis to describe the immature, unfinished or even malicious side of human nature.

There is in some of the painted tyros a certain resemblance to personsportrayed. In other cases the tyros are not fashionable, and they are most weird and wonderful creations. The portraits are futuristic in style, being done in planes and the start spaces of cubism. Mr. Lewis in the foreword to his catalogue says in describing his types:

"They brandish their appetites in their faces, lay bare their teeth in a valedictory; inwting, or merely substantial, they laugh. Some of these tyros are "trying to furnish you with a moment of almost Mediterranean sultriness in order to in this region of engaging warmth, to obtain some advantage over you. They are seen basking themselves in the sunshine of their own abominable nature."

The artist shows a tyro of himself, looking very satanic, and with a formidable set of teeth. Other tyros appear with crimson or metallic blue faces.

PARLIAMENTARY LETTER

There was talk of a ray of hope which the government hoped to get out of the Alberta Provincial Election results. Wherever that ray of hope lies, it certainly is not anywhere around the government camp, for there is even deeper gloom there and a renewed talk of urging the Prime Minister to give up the ghost and go to the country. The government election engineers had looked over the ground during the Medicine Hat campaign and they came back here with an idea that the Farmer movement under A. W. Wood was on the wane. Not one conservative was elected and now they are more convinced than ever that there is grave doubt as to the possibilities of Alberta sending back even one Conservative after a general election.

The political future of the Meighen government will be thoroughly canvassed after the return of Premier Meighen from London, which is expected very shortly and there will be a series of cabinet councils to decide which form of advice he is to accept. The cabinet ministers themselves are divided between those who want to go to the country now and those who want to wait as long as possible. Several of them have decided that there is no hope of coming back and are resigned to the inevitable, but the hanging matter has acquired such a hold that they cannot nerve themselves to make the cold plunge into the unchartered waters of an election. The government is also being advised from outside sources to give up and go to the country, but it is not inclined to listen to such advice until it is forced to do so.

By-elections are bringing no comfort, and every successful test of public opinion is against further Conservative rule whether or not that rule is camouflaged under a name which equals Joseph's coat for variegations. But behind all the counsels on the subject, there are the pleas of government supporters in the House who know they cannot come back anyway, and do not wish to commit hari-kari.

When Parliament does come back, whether it is composed of the same members or not, they will find some changes in their quarters and further bills to meet for extensions to the new parliament buildings. From start to finish there has been a constant (and in many cases unnecessary) building on and tearing down which had every appearance of expedients adopted for the purpose of making a nice plus job more costly to the country and more profitable to the contractors and architects. The scandals in connection with the new buildings date back to the time when Hon. Bob. Rogers was Minister of Public Works and they have several times been brought to the public notice by Liberal members among them being Hon. Chas. Murphy, who resigned from the building committee as a result of the unnecessary expenditures being made.

Mr. Murphy stated to the House last session the facts connected with the reconstruction work on the present building. When the old building was destroyed, the government engaged two architects to go over the ruins and see what could be saved and their report was that there were walls standing which were worth at least two million dollars and that these should be used for the new buildings as they were. But the first thing the committee knew these walls had been demolished and an asset stated to be worth two million dollars had disappeared. Nobody was able to get any satisfactory explanation of this move.

When the building was to be replaced, the government decided in the friendly Lea Construction Co., of Montreal, and without calling for tenders awarded them the job on a percentage of the cost. The building, which was to cost five millions, has already cost double that amount, and neither the architects nor the contractors, are losing on the extra costs. The work will take another year or two yet before it is completed, and then the country will have something which is full of flaws and inaccuracies.

One explanation of the immense cost of the new buildings is found in the fads which have been followed out in the construction. The floor of the Commons chamber is of teakwood and ebony. The former was imported from India and is probably the most expensive wood in the world. The ebony cost the country twenty-five cents an ounce, and they the floor has to be covered with fibre matting and a carpet to deaden the sound of persons walking on it. After spending thousands of dollars on the floor of the chamber alone it was demonstrated that a floor of common lumber or concrete would have been just as satisfactory, since it must be covered with matting to allow the members to be heard when they are speaking.

That floor is a sample of the methods which have been followed out throughout the construction of the building. There has been a constant building up and tearing down, and a consequent waste of enormous sums of money which if the time when economy is being preached by the government which practices it, the direct opposite. The new building is large but it is cut up into hundreds of rooms so it is next to impossible for the members to get together at any time, and there is practically no intercourse between them. However, it is expected to provide work for the architects and contractors for another year or two yet, and by that time, if the Meighen government were still in power, they would find some more alterations to be made which would provide for further outlays.

"PRIVATE OWNERSHIP AND COMPETITION"

Mr. E. B. Biggar died recently in Toronto. He was formerly editor of the Canadian Engineer, and had a long and fruitful experience in Trade Journalism. His hand-book entitled "Hydro-Electric Development in Ontario" is a most convenient and authoritative review of the magnificent progress of the great municipal, co-operative institution which has changed the face of Ontario. A large edition has been distributed, but a few copies are still in the hands of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission. Any application they will be sent free of charge to public and school libraries, Women's Institutes or interested individuals.

The following paragraphs are from Mr. Biggar's book: "The public control of public functions is not a matter of expediency, but a matter of right and duty, and the obligation to public control will not be satisfied in the least if it could be shown that private ownership is more efficient than public. The failings or weakness of one administration is not a reason for abandoning the principle of self-government, but rather for the better form of the civil service or methods of operation. If anything goes wrong in our Province we do not dream of handing back to three or four private Companies the control of our means of intelligence, but we demand new men and better methods.

"Advocates of the private ownership of a public function imagine that the people's rights are to be secured through competition among private corporations. This is a fallacy that obtained in the early days in the first railway era, when the railway companies, by duplicating and triplicating the lines to the centres of greatest traffic were seeking a share of those revenues drawn in every case from the community at large. Rates were often lowered while the companies were extending their reach, but as soon as they attained their ambition their wider object of maintaining the tolls was sought in amalgamating the local systems with which they had connections.

"That competition has lessened the cost of transportation to the Canadian people is an illusion that has now been dispelled. The second and third lines between Toronto and Montreal, for example, have added to the country over $60,000,000 besides the annual maintenance and operating cost of $3,5000,000 to $5,000,000 and the waste of land, labor, etc., on the three rights of way. Instead of bringing a reduction of rates, which was the proposed object, the triplication of lines, by a tacit agreement between the "competitors" has actually been followed by higher rates. Meantime an area of land in Ontario as big as several European states still remains a desert because of the lack of the 850 miles of track devoted to this illusory "competition." The region will remain a desert till electric railways open it up."

The principle is the same in the public service of distributing electric energy for light and power. Although private companies begin operations in the expectation of competition, they are soon merged in one corporation controlling a monopoly and charging all that the traffic will bear. The people have only two choices either to establish under public ownership and central plants for development, transforming, transmitting and distributing electric energy, or to pay large dividends in perpetuity to a group of private individuals controlling a "merger."

PURE AND WHOLESOME FOOD PRODUCTS.

A very apparent effect of the work of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa is the improvement that has taken place in the cleanliness and purity of the people's food. Especially is this true of the work performed by the Live Stock Branch in all of Animals branches. Better equipment at the stock yards has been brought about as well as improved facilities for transportation on the one hand and, an the other, rigid inspection at the abattoirs and slaughter-houses insures healthy and wholesome meats for consumption. It is impossible to overestimate the value of the work that is thus being accomplished. At the canneries also, cleanliness and wholesomeness are secured by the regulations that are enforced by inspectors and supervisors under the immediate control of the Health of Animals Branch. The dairy industry, under the Poultry division of the Live Stock Branch have been advanced in public estimation. In by-gone times householders always had certain suspicions of the eggs supplied at the breakfast table and used in cooking. They usually expected, one, two or three and sometimes more, in a dozen to prove unpalatable, and were rarely disappointed. Today they buy and cook with confidence. The same is true of all other articles of food watched over by this and other departments. By legislation, adulteration has been checked and, as nearly as possible suppressed. The capable work not only continues, but is constantly being expanded and enlarged in scope.

IMPROVEMENT IS TALK OF FRIENDS

"Change Tanlac Has Made in Me Is Simply Wonderful," Says Toronto Woman.

"Tanlac has certainly had a good chance in my case to show what it can do, for I sure had a long hard struggle and had just about tried everything," said Mrs. Mary Richards, of 251 Ashdale Ave., Toronto.

"I have been in a badly run-down condition ever since I had pneumonia six years ago. My stomach was nearly always out of order. My appetite was very poor and I had to be very careful about what I ate, as I suffered terribly from indigestion, headachilis and pains in my chest. My sleep was never sound and I had a tired, worn-out feeling all the time. I had dreadful headaches and weak spells and had fallen off in weight until I was scarcely more than a shadow of my former self, and I was absolutely unfit for work of any kind.

"But Tanlac has done me a world of good. My stomach is in fine condition and I eat all I want and everything agrees with me perfectly. All my aches and pains are things of the past and I'm stronger than I've been in a long time. In fact Tanlac has the same as made a new person of me, for I can do my housework with ease and my friends are talking about the wonderful change that has come over me. I don't believe anyone who suffers as I did can do better than take Tanlac."

VARIETY SHOWER.

The Riddle of Stonehenge.

Recent work undertaken by the Society of Antiquaries and the Office of Works has produced evidence of a fascinating character—namely, that the present monuments are but the remains of Stonehenge II., and that there was an older Stonehenge than the one known to-day. That this megalithic monument of pre-Stonehenge times existed has been proved by the later researches at the "Aubrey holes." A circle of standing stones, enclosed by a bank and a ditch, was the site of this older monument, from which, in the Bronze Age, the stones were taken to help to build the newer one. How Stonehenge was erected in those early times has been suggested by competent authority, and some wonderful repairs carried out in the last twelve months. "The makes of Stonehenge," it is pointed out, "were clearly equal to the task of raising stones of five or six tons to the required heights, and of setting them upright with absolute precision." Levers and inclined planes on earth give no satisfactory explanation, and are excluded on the evidence of one of the existing lintels. This shows an enlargement of the mortises along the length of the under-side stone, which can only be the correction of a miscalculation discovered when the lintel was being lowered on to the tenons. Such an alteration could not have been made without the use of some form of rope and a method of slinging which an uncivilized and primitive community would not possess. Astronomers have dated Stonehenge at 1,500 years before Christ, so that unless the latest evidences conflict with this date something like a civilized community, commanding considerable engineering and mechanical knowledge, must be presumed to have existed in England more than 3,000 years ago.

A Smart Maiden.

Sir Walter Parratt, the organist of St. George's chapel, Windsor, England, who recently celebrated his 80th birthday, is fond of telling the story of how a fair visitor to the castle "got one back" nicely on a bandsman who was showing her round.

A number of stars upon the cuff of a passing veteran aroused the young lady's curiosity.

"He's the battalion astronomer," explained the escort gravely. "Most useful man. Guides us home by the stars when they've lost our way on night manoeuvres."

"How interesting," said the maiden. Then, noting his bandsman's badge—"You represention of an ancient stringed instrument—she exclaimed slyly:

"I suppose that thing on your arm means that you're the regimental lyre?"

Cash Better Than Credit.

Parker—"Martin has a very good idea about the business; I hope he will get credit for it."

Peters—"He'll do better than that if it is a really good idea; he will get cash for it."

Ireland and the Census.

It is understood that the Emerald Isle is faring well out of this year's census. For the last seventy years there has been a progressive decrease in Ireland's population at every decennial census. When the first census of the United Kingdom was taken, in 1801, the Irish figures showed a population of 5,200,000—nearly one-half of the total population of the kingdom, and forty years later it stood at 8,175,000, with the same proportion to the total population. But at the next census Ireland returned only 6½ millions, and the decline has continued unchecked ever since, the population in 1911 being 4,319,234, barely 50 per cent of what it was in 1841, and less than one-tenth of the total for the United Kingdom.

A Pertinent Query.

The cinema producer was giving his final instructions for the production of "The Adventures of Allan 'Mr. Daring," he said, addressing the curly-haired hero, "for sensational purposes I have borrowed a real live lion for this act. The animal will pursue you for five hundred feet.' Mr. Daring interrupted him. 'Five hundred feet?' 'Yes,' replied the producer. "No more than that. Understand?" The hero nodded dubiously, "Yes, I understand, but—does the lion?"

Forest Fires Kill Jobs

HERE are instances of carelessness such as the Fire Rangers of Ontario are meeting all the time. Each is an actual case, as officially reported in detail to the Forestry Branch. Until each individual realizes personal responsibility and co-operates to prevent forest fires, Government Fire Rangers can hope merely to lessen the tragic consequences of such human carelessness and bad judgment.

Save Ontario's Forests
They're Yours

Lumbermen's Fires

May 25th, 1920—A careless river driver, by leaving his smudge fire or throwing a cigarette into slash, burned over two townships, including 7,000,000 feet of pine, a $5,000 mill, camp buildings and equipment worth $7,000, sawn lumber worth $7,500, and killed several million young spruce and jack pine trees.

May 25, 1920—Fire in a rubbish heap behind a lumber company's boarding house got away and, despite prompt action, burned over 1,600 acres, including 2,000,000 feet of white pine, and a set of new camps worth $1,000.

June 1, 1920—Two old men left to attend to the stop logs in a dam, let fire get away from either their smudge or camp fire, and burned over 3,000 acres, including 6,000,000 feet of pine, one mill, four camps, large quantities of supplies, and equipment to a total value of $40,000.

May 4th, 1921—Lumbermen burning slash around their camps, lost control of their fire and 15,000 acres were burned before they regained it.

Railway Fires

June 5th, 1920—Engine No. 1368 started a forest fire which ran over 15,000 acres, burning one saw mill, three sets of lumber camps, stables, houses, and outfits, 8,000 cut logs and 1,400 piles, besides standing timber.

May 25th, 1920—Engine No. 2509 set a fire which burned over 12,000 acres of timber worth $20,000 on the stump, camps and logs worth $5,750, and cost $1,000 to fight.

June 2, 1920—A section crew left a pile of burning ties to go away to their regular work. The fire spread over 1,200 acres.

Fires Set Out Under Permit

June 10th, 1921—Parties burning slash under permit, lost control through bad judgment, and 1,050 acres were burned and forty buildings, including saw mill, were wiped out.

May 27th, 1920—A squatter, burning debris near his shack, fired 7,000 acres, 1,000 of which were virgin timber, and wiped out four sets of logging camps.

Neglected Camp Fires

July 4th, 1920—Tourists left camp fire on shore of Deer Lake. After six days' fight, rangers put fire out, but 550 acres of young pine were dead.

May 31st, 1920—A neglected camp fire, despite efforts of Chief Fire Ranger and 42 men, burned 1,200 acres of young pine.

May 7th, 1921—Indians left camp fire, which burned over 7,000 acres and took one week of fighting to control.

Be careful of fire in the forests. Be careful to put your camp fire out—dead out. Don't throw away lighted matches, cigarettes or cigar ends. Watch out, lest your fire gets away from you.

British Possess Mandate
For German East Africa
How It Will Be Worked

A DRAFT mandate has been prepared giving to Great Britain German East Africa, or Tanganyika, as it is now called.

Britain is constituted the mandatory over all that part of the ex-German protectorate which is not included in the provinces of Urundi and Ruanda, which will go to Belgium.

Britain is thus made responsible for a vast area containing valuable forests and minerals and producing abundant supplies of rubber, cotton, sisal-hemp, copra and coffee, and with a native population of between three and four millions.

Britain, under the draft mandate, is charged not merely with the administration and development of the country, but with "promoting to the utmost the material and moral well-being and the social progress of its inhabitants."

She is prohibited from establishing military or naval bases or organizing native forces except for local police and defence purposes.

She is required to put down slavery and compulsory labor, to exercise strict control over traffic in arms and spirituous liquor, and to safeguard the natives' rights in their land. So far as the outside world is concerned, complete freedom of entry and trade must be ensured.

On all these points, and others, Britain is required to give satisfactory annual reports to the council of the League of Nations. Without the consent of the council of the league, no modification may be made of the terms of the mandate, and any dispute which arises over its interpretation or application must, if it cannot be settled otherwise, be referred to the permanent court of international justice.

The League of National Union, in Great Britain, has been examining these terms, and has suggested amendments.

The attitude of the League of Nations Union, in which Lord Robert Cecil is prominent, is important, showing that the union does not blindly endorse everything proposed by Britain or by the league.

A League of Nations Union in Canada would be useful in arousing and sustaining interest in the league, but as far as mandates are concerned, Canada has none.

In all the negotiations, first in the Imperial War Cabinet, then at the Peace Conference, and later at the assembly of the League of Nations, Canada could and did speak and act with freedom, for she was neither seeking nor obtaining territorial or other material advantage.

In reference to this German East Africa mandate for Great Britain, the League of Nations Union are anxious to guarantee that the spirit of the covenant be properly observed.

They propose that provision shall be made "for a progressive system of education and for the development of tribal self-government," and that the article relating to the land-laws shall be strengthened. A large portion of the territory is unoccupied, and it is proposed that on the coming into force of the mandate all lands "not already alienated by private title, whether occupied or unoccupied," shall be declared to be "native lands," and that no native land shall be alienable without the consent of the authorities.

Another important detail in the mandate dealt with by the League of Nations Union is the clause dealing with the labor question.

It has been charged repeatedly in Great Britain during the past years that "scandalous attempts" have been made by the Colonial Office and local administration to establish a system of forced labor in the neighboring colony of Kenya.

The article in the German East Africa mandate as at present drafted requires that the mandatory shall provide "for as speedy an abolition of domestic and other slavery as social conditions will allow." So general a provision, the League of Nations Union observes, leads only to unnecessary delay, and they therefore suggest that this abolition should be directed to take place within a definite time.

The article also lays it down that the mandatory "shall prohibit all forms of forced or compulsory labor, except for essential public works and services, and then only in return for adequate remuneration." That, also, is considered too vague, and it is proposed that the clause should be amended, so as to make the administration directly responsible for ascertaining the public works or services in question, and to guarantee remuneration "not lower than the current rate."

Needed a Referee.

A young girl who had been engaged as a secretary by a society woman soon discovered that her employer and her husband did not live happily together, but had a quarrel nearly every day. She therefore gave notice to leave.

"Why?" inquired the lady in surprise.

"Oh, you don't want a secretary in this family," replied the girl. "What you need is a referee."

He Couldn't.

On the Friday evening when the great strike had been planned to take place an old lady got into an omnibus. She handed the conductor her fare and said, anxiously, "Are you coming out this evening?"

The conductor shook his head and answered with great politeness, "I'm afraid I can't, mum. I've got to get home to my old woman."

Britisher Buys B.C. Village

MAJOR CHARLES SYDNEY GOLDMAN, formerly member for Falmouth in the British House of Commons, veteran war campaigner, sportsman, and author of note, has bought the entire town of Nicola, in the Okanagan Valley, and over 20,000 acres of agricultural and grazing land adjoining. The price paid has not been revealed.

A few years ago Nicola was a prosperous little town, but in the past few months, another small place a few miles away, has attracted all the community business, with the result that Nicola became practically a "deserted village," peopled only by oldest inhabitants and property owners who hoped against hope that some day something would happen which would restore life to the stagnant community.

It happened when Major Goldman decided that Nicola would make an ideal pleasure resort. Being an intensely practical Englishman, the major's ideas of what should be done to popularize the place were such that, to be successful, it would have to be a one-man proposition. The natives were aghast at the magnitude of Major Goldman's proposals, the unofficial mayor declaring that "it couldn't be did." Nothing daunted, the major took the only other alternative, and announced that he would buy out the whole place, lock, stock and barrel, providing no one tried to hold him up for a fancy price.

Options were secured without delay, at fair valuations, and in a short time Major Goldman held title to every building in town, and every private house within the town limits. He bought the Nicola Hotel, which is being thoroughly remodeled as an up-to-date first-class hotel, and which will be in charge of a Swiss manager specially imported from his homeland, where he was in charge of the Adelphi Hotel, the most famous of Swiss chalets. A full staff of Swiss cooks, waiters and servants have accompanied the manager, who is now running the Adelphi Hotel, at Merritt, also purchased as a side line by Major Goldman.

For his personal accommodation, Major Goldman bought the court house from the British Columbia Government, and has had it remodeled to suit his expensive tastes. With his family, he will take up permanent residence there on his return from England, in about three months.

The only building in Nicola to which an absolutely clear title has not been secured is the town church, some difficulty having arisen regarding vested ownership. However, the wholesale buyer is not unduly worrying over this.

In order to provide the lumber necessary for his manifold enterprises, Major Goldman has bought and is operating a sawmill in the Nicola Valley, just north of Merritt, on the Kettle Valley railway. Much lumber is needed for irrigation flumes, the major having very extensive irrigation projects under consideration. He has recently spent some time in Victoria adjusting a number of water rights, and getting permission to divert various streams so as to get the necessary moisture on his properties. Dams have been constructed with the result that a hill a short distance from the town.

On the land which does not lend itself to irrigation, Major Goldman proposes grazing and breeding thoroughbred stock. Two well-known cattlemen of the Cariboo country, David and Ben Stewart, are under contract to scour the country for the best blood available for the foundation herd of cattle, while a large force of men is at work fencing the grazing land. Eventually there will be about 8,000 cattle.

Electricity, and a comprehensive drainage system, are included among the modern improvements proposed for the new Nicola.

Finally, the scheme proposes making Nicola one of the premier tourist resorts on this continent, with a patronage largely drawn from the Pacific coast cities. Among other things he will advertise extensively, it naturally follows that he is paying particular attention to the sporting possibilities of the district. Good hunting and fishing within reasonable distance, but Nicola lake was fished out years ago. With the cooperation of the provincial department of fisheries, Major Goldman is arranging to re-stock this body of water with game fish.

Discussing his ambitious plans, Major Goldman described himself as "an earnest, serious developer," and most emphatically pointed out that he was in no sense a speculator. "I have come to Canada because I see the wonderful future of the dominion," he said, "and I have settled in the Nicola valley because I realise the enormous possibilities there. I have purchased all the land I require, and now I am about to concentrate on what I have, I shall develop this land, and will open up the community with all the energy of which I am capable."

Major Goldman first became nationally known as a war correspondent during the South African War, when he accompanied Sir Redvers Buller's force as far as Ladysmith, and later served in a newspaper capacity with a cavalary unit. As a result of experiences in this campaign, he wrote "With Gen. French's Cavalry in South Africa," "The Empire and the Century," and "Cavalry in Future Wars." He is also the author of a number of text books on mining, and a frequent contributor to a number of high-class English periodicals.

WOMEN OF MIDDLE LIFE

A Dangerous Period Through Which Every Woman Must Pass

Practical Suggestions Given by the Women Whose Letters Follow

Afton, Tenn.—"I want other suffering women to know what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. During the Change of Life I was in bed for eight months and had two good doctors treating me but they did me no good. A friend advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which I did, and in a short time I felt better. I had all kinds of bad spells, but they all left me. Now when I feel weak and nervous I take the Vegetable Compound and it always does me good. I wish all women would try it during the Change of Life for I know it will do them good. If you think it will induce some one to try the Vegetable Compound you may publish this letter."—Mrs. A. Keller, Afton, Tenn.

Mrs. Mary Lister of Adrian, Mich., adds her testimony to the value of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to carry women safely through the Change of Life. She says:

"It is with pleasure that I write to you thanking you for what your wonderful medicine has done for me. I was passing through the Change of Life and had a displacement and weakness so that I could not stand on my feet and other annoying symptoms. A friend told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and the first bottle helped me, so I got more and I am now doing my housework. Your medicine is certainly woman's friend and you may use this testimonial as you choose."—Mrs. Mary Lister, 608 Frank Street, Adrian, Mich.

It is said that middle age is the most trying period in a woman's life, and owing to modern methods of living not one woman in a thousand passes through this perfectly natural change without experiencing very annoying symptoms.

These smothering spells, the dreadful hot flashes that send the blood rushing to the head until it seems as though it would burst, and the faint feeling that follows, as if the heart were going to stop, those sinking or dizzy spells are all symptoms of a nervous condition, and indicate the need for a special medicine.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a root and herb medicine especially adapted to act upon the feminine system. It acts in such a manner as to build up the weakened nervous system and enables a woman to pass this trying period with the least possible annoying symptoms.

Women everywhere should remember that most of the commoner ailments of women are not the surgical ones—they are not caused by serious displacements or growths, although the symptoms may be the same, and that is why so many apparently serious ailments readily yield to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as it acts as a natural restorative and often prevents serious troubles.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Private Text-Book upon "Ailments Peculiar to Women" will be sent to you free upon request. Write to The Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Massachusetts. This book contains valuable information.

A Few Bulls Not Irish

A "BULL" is supposed to be the birthright of an Irishman, and a typical instance of "a ludicrous inconsistency or blunder in speech" (as the dictionary describes a "bull") is afforded by the following:

An Irish farmer, coming home from market, was asked how he had sold his pig. He replied, "Well, I didn't get as much as I expected, but I didn't expect I would."

Many people without Irish blood in their veins, however, have perpetrated "bulls." Members of Parliament, clergymen and novelists have all been guilty of "inconsistencies in speech."

The Archbishop of York equalled the "bull" quoted above in a rather more delicate manner when he remarked, "There are signs that peace may come sooner than we expect."

Mr. James Sexton, M.P., once credited with the following: "When shall the lion of autocracy walk hand in hand with the blood gates of democracy?" while Mr. Adamson, the Labor M.P., not long ago besought the Government not "to act in such a way that the mines would be a millstone round the neck which threatens to engulf us."

Another M.P. stated in the British House of Commons: "The right hon. gentleman has been laboriously dragging a red herring across the path, but I beg to tell him, Mr. Speaker, that it has missed fire."

Referring to writers, Dr. Dillon credited with the following: "When shall the lion of autocracy walk hand in hand with the blood gates of democracy?" while Mr. Adamson, the Labor M.P., not long ago besought the Government not "to act in such a way that the mines would be a millstone round the neck which threatens to engulf us."

Another M.P. stated in the British House of Commons: "The right hon. gentleman has been laboriously dragging a red herring across the path, but I beg to tell him, Mr. Speaker, that it has missed fire."

Mr. James Sexton, M.P., once credited with the following: "When shall the lion of autocracy walk hand in hand with the blood gates of democracy?" while Mr. Adamson, the Labor M.P., not long ago besought the Government not "to act in such a way that the mines would be a millstone round the neck which threatens to engulf us."

Another M.P. stated in the British House of Commons: "The right hon. gentleman has been laboriously dragging a red herring across the path, but I beg to tell him, Mr. Speaker, that it has missed fire."

Referring to writers, Dr. Dillon credited with the following gem appeared in an Irish paper: "On last Boxing Day some of the publichouses were closed and some remained open. This year, it seems, the very reverse is the case."

An amusing "bull" was made by Mr. J. R. Mecredy in a written description of a tour in France. He remarked that "the river which flowed through the town was bone dry."

Among novelists, Mr. W. J. Locke has put one of the best specimens of a "bull" on record. In his novel, "Derelicts," he states, "The old man had gone to Exeter to bury his sister, his only surviving relative."

The witty pointed remark is the opposite of the bull, and may aptly be termed a "bull's-eye." An entertaining selection has been collected by Mr. J. C. Percy in his book "More Bulls and Blunders."

One of the best examples of stinging repartee is afforded by a reply given by Jack Towers, a noted character of his day, to the Prince Regent. The prince was in Portsmouth and seeing Towers across the street, shouted out in his royal way, "Halloo, Towers, I hear you are the greatest blackguard in Portsmouth?" Towers replied, with a low bow, "I hope your Royal Highness has not come here to take away my reputation."

Another instance of the repartee of that period is preserved in the famous reply of Wilkes, a politician and editor. Wilkes was rebuking "God Save the King," and the Prince of Wales asked him, "How long have you taken to that tune?" "Ever since I had the honor of your Royal Highness' acquaintance," was the brutal answer.

In later days Mr. Black, editor of the Morning Chronicle, was the victim of a stinging rebuke from Lord Melbourne, then Prime Minister. Black had been attacking the Minister in his paper, and, meeting in Pall Mall, the two inquired after each other's health. Mr. Black explained that he was suffering from a cold. "Ah, Mr. Black," said Lord Melbourne, "you have been lying between damp sheets."

Sir John Irwin, a man famous in Georgian days, the following story is told. One day when Sir John was suffering from an attack of gout, his doctor called, to find him cracking a bottle of wine. Said the doctor, "These pipes of Madeira will be the death of you; they are the cause of all your sufferings." "Well, then," responded the victim, "fill your glass, for now you have found the cause, the sooner we get rid of it the better!"

Japanese English.

Of the eagerness of the Japanese to learn English Mr. DeBurg Daly in "An Irishwoman in China" gives an amusing account. She says they will pounce on you at railway stations and on steamers and insist on talking with you in order to practice the new tongue. Sometimes the questions they ask are odd enough. A Japanese clerk accosted a tall, dark missionary in these words: "Sir, or madam, as the case may be, what is your name?" And Mrs. DeBurgh Daly says she has been told that a placard was exhibited on a little Japanese house, setting forth that "English is taught here up to G." The house coolie at the hotel said to her, with a polite bow, "Will you have some hot?" "I discovered that he meant to ask whether I wished the steam heat to be turned on!" adds the writer.

Tercentenary of the Potato.

In 1621 the governor of the Bermudas sent to the governor of Virginia, two large cedar chests in which were plants and fruits and vegetables, known to the coral islands, but not to the mainland. This event will be celebrated next December, for the potato was one of the best contributions.

THE YPRES SALIENT.

Blood-stained Ground Will Become Consecrated Spot.

The Ypres Salient, the "Bloody Angle" of the war, where 200,000 brave men fell and lie, will always be consecrated ground for British people. The Ypres League which has been founded, with headquarters in Henrietta street, London, under the patronage of the King, is designed to embrace in a brotherhood all who served in the historic spot. In the city of Ypres itself will be kept a register of the dead, and plans are in progress to mark the sites of the great battles, to guide pilgrims to the most memorable fighting places, and to put up some visible memorial on behalf of the League. "There may be a belfry," writes Sir Philip Gibbs, "whose chimes sounding across the Menin road, below Passchendaele, beyond Hooge, will be a spiritual call to the hearts of those who know what happened there." The Ypres League certificate of membership will be given to the families of those who fell in the salient, and will be a memorial of honor. Sir Philip Gibbs writes:

"There were other British battlefields where the test came. The fields of the Somme were the fighting grounds and the graveyards of thousands of gallant men. From St. Quentin to La Basse, across the Vimy Ridge, out beyond Arras, there is not a yard of earth that does not belong to the history of British valor, suffering and sacrifice. Each mummock of ground was a landmark in this frightful epic of human strife. But the Ypres Salient is especially the greatest battleground of the British race. All our divisions passed through the furnace there at one time or other. Not one of them escaped that ordeal, and, by general consent, it was the worst place of all."

The Canadian army had its share in the "valor, suffering and sacrifice" almost from the beginning, when it barred the way to Calais and withstood the first attack in which the enemy used the barbarous weapon of gas. Many gallant Canadians are buried there, and those who survive have imperishable memories.

Mrs. Hills—"I'm tired out this morning. I was up half the night with the toothache."

Mrs. White, sympathizingly—"That is too bad. I hope you have seen a dentist this morning."

Mrs. Hills—"Oh, it was my husband's tooth that ached."

Can't See Her Faults at First Sight.

Harold—"It's wonderful, old man, what love will enable a chap to see in a girl that he never saw before."

Reggie—"No doubt; but's equally wonderful what it won't let him see that he'll see later on."

OLDEST AMERICAN BANK.

Institution at Yorktown Dates Back to English Days.

Within twenty miles of where the first English settlement in America was made at Jamestown is the scene where Capt. John Smith records the story of his rescue by Pocahontas, the daughter of the Indian chief, Powhatan. Within a circle of twenty miles is to be found the oldest Protestant church in America; the kitchen where Martha Washington cooked in good colonial style; the college which has graduated three Presidents; Bruton Church, in which more men of historical importance have worshipped than in any other church in America—and Yorktown, where Cornwallis surrendered to Washington.

Although Yorktown has a population of less than two hundred, it has two banks, both of which are working in what are probably the two oldest buildings used for banks in America. One of these banks, operating under state and trust company laws, is housed in the historic oldest custom-house built in America—erected in 1715. Here the ships for Philadelphia were once compelled to enter and clear. Here at one time was the gathering place of the financiers of the early colonists. Wall Street has taken away the financiers, but has left the same old building with its same old walls of English brick.

To-day the cashier welcomes the visitor with true Virginia hospitality. There is no rush—nobody hurries in Yorktown. Every one has all day to-morrow not yet touched.

Friendliness and hospitality are more important in Yorktown and Virginia than profits—except when some outside profiteer has entered upon his field of work in Virginia. The average Virginian thinks more of the past than of the future and more of friendship, than of money. The modern autoluddite is doing more to change the Virginian from his good old easy-going way than anything else in America.

Just across the street from the old custom building is another building housing the New York and National Bank of Yorktown. The town and surrounding country are so prosperous that there seems plenty of business for both banks. The building appears more quaint and ancient than even the custom-house building erected in 1715.

Both buildings are priceless souvenirs of a past age and time of colonial glory. To change the outlines of either would seem like sacrilege and disloyalty to the Colonial Fathers. It is well that they are used as banking institutions until such time as wealthy lovers of history shall buy them and hand them over for preservation to some historical society.

Needs Reforming.

Archie—"Had to be done, old man, as a matter of form!"

Fred—"A thing that is done as a matter of form very often needs reforming."

An Adder.

School Visitor—"This snake of which I speak is said to strike with mathematical precision."

Smart Pupil—"Then it must be an added!"

Distribution of Bible.

During its existence of more than a century the British and Foreign Bible Society in London has distributed approximately 25,000,000 copies of the Bible printed in more than 400 languages and dialects.

Late Friday evening a westbound C. N. R. train ran into a herd of milch cows about two miles west of Yarker, and killed eleven of them. The train rounded a curve quickly and smashed into the huddled mass before the engineer had time to stop. The cattle were owned by Wm. Gehan and were valued at $400. On Friday a train struck and killed four head owned by Joseph Lewis at almost the same spot. The cattle had made their way to the right of way through the fences. A number of men went from Yarker on Saturday to bury the cattle.

Reception to New Pastor.

Nearly fifty-five years ago The Lone Camper was third-assistant Printers' Devil on the Hamilton Times, accounting for his present-day small knowledge of the Art and Mystery of the "Art Preservative of All Arts." After a few years on the Times, Chicago claimed him until the late seventies, followed by a varied and interesting experience as a tramp "Jour." and employer. Then succeeded nearly thirty years commercial-touristing out of New York City, from Maine to "Oregon's ultimate shore," and Florida up to near the North Pole. In recent years, principally for health, and incidentally to get up matter for a book about "Little Journeys Into the Open," with "Notes on Walking and Camping," he has made a number of walking and camping tours, going well into six thousand miles, and now on a walking and camping trip from Toronto to Montreal, and return to Toronto—walking and camping ALL the way,—writing weekly articles for the Toronto Sunday World, addressed to Boy Scouts and Girl Guides. Before closing there must be added a word of thanks to Mr. A. E. Paul and members of the Park Commission for the privilege of camping for a few days in Napanee's pretty little Warner Park.

Seeking Oil in Britain

ALTHOUGH petroleum has been known from time immemorial, it is interesting to note that the petroleum industry really had its birth in England, in spite of the fact that for generations crude oils have been used for illumination purposes in the East.

Herodotus, for example, describes the oil pits in the vicinity of Babylon, thus indicating the value and importance attached to-day to the great potential oil-fields of Mesopotamia. The ancient records of China and Japan, where petroleum was known as "burning water," are said to contain many allusions to the use of natural gas for lighting and heating. Sir Walter Raleigh furnished the earliest accounts of American petroleum in his description of the Trinidad pitch lake in 1596, while in the seventeenth century the natural gas of Lancashire and the oil of Shropshire were brought by Thomas Shirley to the attention of the Royal Society; and Peter Kalm, a Russian traveler, in his book on America, published in 1748, showed on a map the oil springs of Pennsylvania.

But it was in 1847 that natural petroleum was first discovered and worked at the Riddings colliery in the Midlands, not far from the present zone in which test drilling is now being conducted by the British Government under the direction of Lord Cowdray, and it was from this oil that illuminating oil was first distilled. Here Young commenced his labors, which ultimately established the Scottish shale industry.

It was not until 1859, some twelve years after the working of oil at the Riddings colliery, that the famous Drake well at Titusville, in Pennsylvania, established the possibility of obtaining oil in commercial quantities by boring; and Drake's success gave birth to the petroleum industry in the United States, which now produces over 60,000,000 tons of oil per annum out of the world's total of 72,000,000 tons per annum.

Meanwhile, Britain, the discoverer, made little progress with the petroleum industry, and only the Great War has awakened the Empire to a realization that, as Sir John Cadman, director of the Petroleum Department, says "Oil became the very key to victory, just as now in peace it is rapidly becoming the vital thing in the industrial development and progress of the world."

In the hope of establishing a petroleum industry in the British Isles on a modern scale, the Government has taken steps to regulate drilling and production from the very beginning. Since the war it has been determined to take all necessary steps to determine the existence or otherwise of natural petroleum in the Motherland. On behalf of the Government, Messrs. Pearsons commenced drilling operations in Derbyshire, Staffordshire and the Midlothian district of Scotland.

Of the eleven wells sunk one only, that at Hardstoft, has so far reached the productive stage, oil being encountered at this well in May, 1919, at a depth of 377 feet, and the flow of oil has continued to date at the rate of about one ton of oil a day. For various causes, none of the other wells have at present reached a stage where evidence, negative or positive, is forthcoming, but sufficient has already been secured to indicate that the test was fully justified.

"There does not appear much reason to doubt that oil in commercial quantities will be forthcoming in England, but it will take years to develop fully," says Sir John Cadman.

In the United Kingdom to-day there are 500,000 motor cars in use and many more being manufactured. British oil-burning ships represent a total of about 3,000,000 deadweight tons, with enough under construction or being converted from coal-burners, to make a total of 5,000,000 tons of oil-burning craft shortly under the Union Jack.

Estimated requirements for the United Kingdom for 1921 are 5,000,000 tons of oil, of which Scottish shale produces only 300,000 tons, and coal another 65,000 tons. The whole Empire produces only 1,500,000 tons of oil per annum, according to Sir John Cadman. No wonder the cry is "Oil and still more oil" for the Empire!

"What are those two boys of yours workin' at now?" inquired Squire Rabbleu, of Seneca County, when he had whoaed his team of grays in front of the home of his former old neighbor, Farmer Tittsworth, "I ain't heard nothin' about them for six years."

"They're both in the fillum business," the farmer replied. "Bill's a movie actor an' Tom's a doctor that removes cataracts."

Descendants of Genius.

"Byron's grandson, Wentworth, put me up for a fortnight at his house on the Chelsea Embankment," writes Mr. W. H. Mallock, in Harper's Magazine, and during the visit an incident took place that, if merely judged by the names of the few persons concerned in it, might be thought picturesquely memorable.

"Students of Robert Browning may recollect a short poem of his that begins with the following lines—

Ah, did you once see Shelley plain,
And did he stop and speak to you,
And did you speak to him again?
How strange it seems and new!

"My own answer would be, I did not see Shelley plain, but I did the next thing to it. Sir Percy and Lady Shelley—the poet's son and his daughter-in-law—were Wentworth's neighbors, though Wentworth had never met either of them. Lady Shelley had been an old friend of my mother's, and I took Wentworth one day to tea with her. To the wife of Shelley's son I introduced Bryon's grandson. Lady Shelley said some pleasant things to me about my mother; we all then lamented the prevalence of the east wind, which recommended her crumpets. Lady Shelley discussed with Wentworth some houses that were being built in the neighborhood.

"At this point the drawing-room door opened and the son of the author of "Prometheus Unbound" entered. He was a fresh-looking country gentleman whose passion was private theatricals. Close to his own house he had built a little private theatre, and the conversation turned on the question of whether a license would be necessary if the public were admitted by payment to witness the performance of a farce in the interest of some deserving charity."

Spanish General and His Officers Commit Suicide.

Forces In Morocco Suffered Reverse at the Hands of Rebel Tribesmen and Dramatic Sequel Followed—It is Said That Action of Leader Saved Lives of Many of His Soldiers.

LONDON, July 25. — The Spanish forces in Morocco have suffered a reverse at the hands of rebel tribesmen in the advanced position of Annal, near Melilla, followed by the dramatic suicide of the general in command, together with the whole of his staff.

The Madrid correspondent of Le Journal telegraphs the following account communicated by a Spanish officer who has been able to escape. Gen. Silvestre had paid but little importance to the reports of mutinies among the native troops, and, thinking that his presence among the rebellious soldiers would be sufficient to restore order, he decided to leave for the position of Igermiten with a squadron of regulars and an infantry regiment of Alcantara.

The rebellious native troops, several thousand strong, and armed with artillery, made a vigorous surprise attack on the Spanish force at a point known as the position of Annal.

Gen. Silvestre, who had received news of the attack and rushed to the rescue of the assailed troops, gave orders that the position should be evacuated after destroying all material that could not be used or taken away. Then began a retreat towards Melilla. The attacking forces, which were considerably increasing in number, pursued the Spaniards and inflicted upon them serious losses. However, the dislocated troops of Silvestre were able to reach Annal, where they speedily entrenched themselves, while wireless messages calling for reinforcements were sent to Ceuta and Teuquan.

Meanwhile the natives succeeded in cutting off Silvestre from his supply base, and the general, pressed by the enemy on all sides, decided to prevent a general massacre by retreating further to the position of Sedi Driss. The Spanish forces were then almost surrounded by natives, and the work of evacuation from the new position was extremely difficult.

The retreating troops, carrying wounded, had to leave many equipments, which on many occasions were attacked by the pursuing tribesmen, who charged with fixed bayonets, causing heavy casualties on the Spaniards.

Gen. Silvestre had remained behind at Annal with all members of his staff and most of the troops had left and the situation was becoming critical, the Chief of Staff said to him: "General, I think now it is time for us to leave."

"Of course, but make sure that the men are safe," replied the general sharply.

A short time after, as he and his staff were the only men remaining at Annal, Gen. Silvestre, who was deadly pale, called his officers and asked them to stand around him.

"Gentlemen," he said, "the moment has come for each of us to do his last duty."

Without adding a word, the general drew his revolver. Other officers did the same. After shaking hands they kissed each other, and blew out their brains. Gen. Silvestre was last to shoot himself. A short time after the Moors were in the place and carried off the bodies.

The gallant action of Gen. Silvestre and his staff, among whom were Col. Maniella, Col. Morales and many other officers, had saved the lives of thousands of Spanish soldiers. The news of the tragic suicide of the general and his officers has caused a profound sensation in Madrid.

TAX U.S. TOBACCO.

Hon. Manning Doherty in Favor of Heavy Duty.

WINDSOR, Ont., July 25.—A duty of $1 a pound on American leaf tobacco to deter Canadians from buying the American product is advocated by Hon. Manning Doherty, Ontario Minister of Agriculture, who had conferences with Essex and Kent County tobacco growers in Kingsville Friday. He said that Canadians spent $14,000,-000 for American tobacco last year.

Mr. Doherty said efforts had been made to establish a market for Canadian tobacco in England and in European countries. He thought, however, there are good prospects for an English market for flue-cured tobacco.

W. C. Noxon, recently appointed Agricultural Agent of Ontario in Great Britain, who accompanied Mr. Doherty, leaves shortly for England. He is to devote considerable attention to the tobacco situation.

STILL HOPE FOR PEACE

Optimism in Old Land Over the Irish Situation.

Although First Terms Announced May Not Satisfy the "Republicans," More Conferences Are Expected and Good Results May Follow—Situation Not Disconcerting to Northern Cabinet.

LONDON, July 25.—The feeling in both London and Dublin over the prospects of peace in Ireland remains optimistic. Eamonn de Valera, the Irish Republican leader, Saturday last issued the British terms with Arthur Griffith and others at the Mansion House in Dublin, but no formal conference was held, and Mr. de Valera informed inquirers that it was most unlikely any developments would take place in the immediate future.

There will probably be further consultations among the Sinn Fein ministers, after which a meeting of the Dail Eireann will be called. The date for this meeting has been fixed, and it is presumed that modifications of the terms can be sought, before the "republican parliament" takes up the matter officially.

Gen. Smuts, the South African Premier, is at present visiting Ireland early this week for the purpose of conciliating, if possible, the opposing factions of the North and the South. The services of Gen. Smuts at the disposal of both Mr. de Valera and Sir James Craig, the Ulster Premier, and it is probable that he will have considerable latitude in the task before him.

The opinion in London is that the British terms are likely to be accepted as they stand, but Mr. de Valera is almost certain to come to London again, with more of his colleagues, after the Dail Eireann has already declared that he would be available at any time he was really needed.

The Belfast View.

BELFAST, Ireland, July 25.—The belief appears general in Belfast that Eamonn de Valera, the Irish Republican leader, will not accept the terms of the British Government for a settlement of the Irish question, which falls far short of the republican ideal.

It may be assumed that the outstanding feature of the Governmental offer is fiscal control which implies dominion status for Ireland outside the six northern counties, and, unless special provision is made to the contrary, it is believed likely to prove the strongest tester for forcing Ulster to join with the southern parliament.

The prospects, so far as actions may be adjudged, are not disconcerting to the northern cabinet. Sir James Craig, the Ulster Premier, has left for Scotland with his wife and daughter to join his sons who now are on holiday there, and John Miller Andrews, Ulster Minister of Labor, who is also President of the Ulster Unionist Labor Association, did not attend the monthly meeting of that body on night. Although not officially stated, it is generally believed here that the Ulster Government has received the most positive guarantees from Premier Lloyd George.

Meanwhile, the authorities are taking advantage of the truce to restore matters to a normal basis. The North Donegal Herald, which it was thought would not be reprieved for weeks, already is in operation, and orders have been given on the detailed notice to restart the Glentries line.

KILLED ON HIS FARM.

J. A. Calder, M.P.P., Victim of Accident.

WOODSTOCK, July 25.—John A. Calder, Liberal representative in the Provincial Legislature for North Oxford, died early Saturday morning at his home on the eleventh line of East Nissouri, from the effects of an accident Friday afternoon.

Mr. Calder was assisting in putting in the last load when the crosspiece to which the pulley was fastened broke and the pulley hit Mr. Calder across the head, inflicting a fracture of the skull. He never regained consciousness.

Mr. Calder was one of the outstanding figures in public life in Oxford. He was 55 years of age, and was born in East Nissouri, a son of the late Donald Calder, who was at one time a member of Oxford Council. For five years Mr. Calder served in the Township Council of East Nissouri.

He was a former president of the Western Farmers' Weather Insurance Co., and at the time of his death was an active member of the Board of Directors of that company. He was always interested in the North Oxford Liberal Association, and was at one time president of the body.

He also took a keen interest in educational affairs, and for several years served on the Kintore School Board.

On September 23, 1918, he was elected by acclamation as the Liberal member of North Oxford, and succeeded Hon. Hon. N.W. Rowell, who resigned to accept a Cabinet position with the Union Government at Ottawa. Again, in 1919, Mr. Calder was returned to the House by a huge majority. He belonged to the Masonic Order, King Solomon's Lodge, No. 404, Thamesford, and was a member of the Presbyterian Church at Kintore.

Five Families Homeless.

OTTAWA, July 25.—Damage estimated at $50,000 was caused, five families were rendered homeless and fifteen motor cars and a carload of furniture destroyed by a fire of unknown origin which broke out in the village of Winchester about 30 miles from here Sunday. The conflagration of the whole town was threatened.

Canon Rollit Dead.

MONTREAL, July 25.—In the death of Rev. Canon Rollit, which occurred on Saturday here, the Anglican Diocese of Montreal loses its doyen in point of service as a clergyman. He was in his 81st year and in the ministry 55 years.

TWO KILLED BY STORM.

Gale With Hail Passed Over City of Ottawa.

OTTAWA, July 25.—Two lives were lost as a result of a wind and rain storm of hurricane proportions which swept over Ottawa and district Sunday afternoon, played havoc with windows and awnings in the city districts, created considerable damage to the properties of market gardeners on the outskirts and blew down a heavy awning erected over a temporary grandstand in the Columbia Street park in Hull. Several people were injured. The dead are:

Wilfrid Parizeau, aged 12 years, of Rockcliffe, Hull, was killed when he was struck by a iron bar, used to support an awning over the baseball park in Hull which was blown down.

Napoleon Russen, aged 59 years, 27 Lorne avenue, Ottawa, who fell from the roof of a shed at the rear of his home while he was repairing damage caused by the storm.

Considerable excitement was caused at the Coliseum Park, where a large crowd was watching an International Baseball League fixture, when an awning erected over a temporary grandstand was blown down by the force of the gale. Several hundred people were trapped under the spacious folds of the awning.

Reports from outlying districts indicated that considerable damage had followed in the wake of the storm. Much of the loss will be suffered by market gardeners, it was said.

Telephone and telegraph lines were not seriously damaged.

SCHOONER WAS SEIZED.

French-Canadian Skipper Laughs at Yankees.

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J., July 25.—Federal officers have seized the British two-masted schooner Pocomokie, moored in Gardner's Basin, in the inlet district here. Captain J. A. Roy, the French-Canadian skipper of the craft, took the seizure with the same degree of good humor which has characterized his conduct since word was received here several days ago to hold the vessel under surveillance, as she was suspected of having a cargo of liquor aboard.

A search of the vessel was made, but no liquor was found aboard.

"I am going to sail for Nassau when I get good and ready," said Captain Roy. "I am not going to Quebec, although that is my home city," he said, "nor am I on the vessel having paid $212,000 for her."

Captain Roy insists that his vessel sprang a leak during a storm off the coast when she was, as a consequence, he threw overboard one thousand cases of liquor which he had aboard.

While the federal coast guards were seizing the schooner federal prohibition officers were combing the city for a trace of Captain Roy's cargo. They obtained a search warrant from United States Commissioner Steelman early in the day and searched an Atlantic avenue restaurant, but failed to find any liquor.

BANDITS IN WINDSOR.

Canadian Badly Wounded by American Gunmen.

WINDSOR, July 25.—With a bullet wound in his abdomen, Frank Gerard, aged 62, Wyandotte street east, is in the hotel Dieu in a dangerous condition, taken there Saturday morning, half an hour after one of two bandits, who raided his home and shot him when he refused to give them money.

Gerard was found lying unconscious on the couch at his home by George Lesperance, and a friend, Louis, who heard the shot and ran into the house to investigate. Gerard states that the men had carried him to the couch after shooting him. They did not enter farther than the hallway when they raided the house, Gerard told them there was no money, demanding money at the point of a gun. Gerard said that he told them that he had no money and tried to push them out of the front door. One of the men levelled his gun and fired a shot. This struck the wall just across the hallway. The bandit fired again, taking direct aim. This bullet struck Gerard in the abdomen and he fell in a heap to the floor.

The bandits were fleeing from the house and jumped into an automobile bearing a Michigan license, standing in front of the house, when Lesperance and his son came along.

Aid for a Million Children.

WASHINGTON, July 25.—As head of the American Relief Association, Herbert Hoover has sent a sympathetic response to the appeal from Maxime Gorky for relief. Gorky said in behalf of the starving and sick men, women and children in Soviet Russia.

Mr. Hoover agrees to furnish assistance to a million children in Russia, on conditions that have been laid down by the American Relief Administration in its efforts to help distressed people in a number of foreign countries.

There is one additional condition, and that is that the Soviet Russia must release immediately the Americans held prisoner by the Soviet authorities. Some of the prisoners are reported as starving.

When Women Took Snuff.

Queen Charlotte opened a snuff account at the Old Snuff House in Haymarket, S.W., in 1799, and continued with it until her death in April, 1818. Princess Charlotte (in 1802) and Princess Elizabeth (1812) were good customers. Lady Dalkeith, Lady Shrewsbury, Lady Suffolk, and the Duchess of Grafton were all discriminating snuff-takers on the ledger in 1764, and dozens of titled women figure in the books from then down to 1805, when Mrs. Siddons opened an account for a regular supply.

The Diving Bell.

The diving bell was not mentioned before the sixteenth century. Two Greeks in that century—1538—gave an exhibition before Charles V., descending into water of considerable depth in a large inverted kettle. The same principle of his car, which he had installed up opposite the police station on St. Catherine street.

It was noticed by passers-by that a attitude of the driver was not normal, and upon investigation it was found that he was dead..

Dr. Hill had that very morning performed an operation at the Royal Victoria Hospital, where he was associate surgeon.

CATTLE MARKETS

BUFFALO LIVE STOCK.

BUFFALO, N.Y., July 25.—Cattle receipts, 100, steady.

Calves, 400; active and lower; $5 to $11.

Hogs, 2,400, slow; good hogs, weak; heavy, $11 to $11.25; mixed, $11.40 to $11.75; yorkers, $11.75 to $12; pigs, $11.75 to $12; rough, $8.50 to $9; stags, $4.50 to $6.

Sheep and lambs, 1,000; slow; lambs, $1 lower; lambs, $5 to $11; others unchanged.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

CHICAGO, July 25.—Cattle receipts, 500; compared with a week ago, beef steers, 15c to 25c higher; yearlings and more; plainer kinds and grassers weak to 25c lower; best stock generally steady; spots lower on in-between grades; cows fully 50c higher; bulls, 50c lower; veal calves, 25c lower; stockers and feeders slow, about steady; best stockers and feeders, 25c higher.

Hogs, 4,000; closing mostly 10c to 15c lower than Friday's average; best lights and butchers steady to 5c lower; shippers; top lights, $11.15 early; bulk better grades, $10.10 to $11; bulk packing, $9.60 to $10.05; pigs steady; bulk desirable kinds, $10.50 to $10.85.

Sheep, 2,000; practically all packers direct. Compared with a week ago, fat lambs and yearlings about steady; feeder lambs and fat sheep steady to 25c higher.

Bavarian Minister Slays Self.

BERLIN, July 25.—The Bavarian, Minister of Transportation, von Frauendorfer, one of the world's greatest numismatists, walked into the river and shot his brains out rather than plead guilty to forging the bank notes of Rohn-Frauendorf. His suicide is Bavaria's biggest sensation. Throughout Germany Frauendorfer was known as a leading statesman.

Frauendorfer's tragedy came to light under peculiar circumstances. Experts from various countries have been calling upon the Director of the Munich Museum, asking for expert opinion upon the rarest Roman coins. Frauendorfer first pronounced them genuine, but one day more coins came to his notice than he knew existed throughout the world. The Director referred the subject to Frauendorfer, who became confused, and thus brought suspicion upon himself.

Honeymoon Dirigibles.

PARIS, July 25. — "Dirigibles made for two" are likely to result in a wave of dirigible flights for air honeymoons. Andre Schelcher, a French aeronaut, has invented an airship with a capacity of 1,000 kilos, gross weight of 1,600 kilos, capable of taking two passengers and baggage only, at a speed of 50 miles per hour. Five hundred orders have already made experimental ascents, and the makers are overwhelmed with orders. The "honeymoon dirigible" costs only 24,000 francs—no more than a high-class touring car.

Foodstuffs in Russia.

BERLIN, July 25. — Fantastic prices for necessaries of life are reported in recent advices from Petrograd and Moscow. Some late price quotations are: Per pound of bread, 4,500 rubles (the normal pre-war value of the ruble was about fifty cents); a pound of butter, 20,000 rubles; a pound of sugar, 25,000 rubles; a pound of potatoes, 2,000; three-fourths of a litre of milk, (about 1¼ pints), 2,500; a new suit, 500,000 to 1,000,000; a pair of shoes, 300,000.

Risked Plane Over Flight.

WINDERMERE, July 25.—Mrs. M. Ritchie, Darling street, Brantford, who is more than 70 years old, made a flight with Col. Barker on Friday, and enjoyed the experience.

Col. Barker told Mrs. Ritchie before making the flight that if she did not enjoy the experience he would give her the plane.

Miss Myrtle Rutherford of Burford, who is also staying at Muskoka, subsequently made the flight with Mrs. Ritchie.

Perley to Represent Canada.

OTTAWA, July 25.—It is intimated that Sir George Perley, Canadian High Commissioner in London, may be called upon to represent Canada at the September meeting of the Imperial Conference in London, instead of Sir George Foster, acting Prime Minister.

The Sinn Fein delegates have returned to Ireland with British offer.

Surgeon Dies In His Car.

MONTREAL, July 25.— Stricken by an attack of angina pectoris Saturday afternoon, Dr. Walter H. P. Hill, one of the best known surgeons in this city, died almost at once at the wheel of his car, which he had just pulled up opposite the police station on St. Catherine street.

It was noticed by passers-by that a attitude of the driver was not normal, and upon investigation it was found that he was dead..

Dr. Hill had that very morning performed an operation at the Royal Victoria Hospital, where he was associate surgeon.

The VOICE OF THE PACK

By EDISON MARSHALL

COPYRIGHT 1920 BY LITTLE, BROWN, AND COMPANY

Foregoing any attempt to ignore it, she set her cool young mind to thinking what manner of beast it might be. Its step was not greatly different from that of a large dog—except possibly a dog would have made slightly more noise. Yet she couldn't even be sure of this basic premise, because this animal, whatever it might be, had at first seemingly moved with utmost caution, but now took less care with its step than is customary with the wild denizens of the woods. A wolf, for instance, can simply drift when it wishes, and the silence of a cougar is a name. Yet unless her pursuer were a dog, which seemed entirely unlikely, it was certainly one of these two. She would have liked very much to believe the step was that of Old Wolf the bear, suddenly curious as to what this dim light of hers might be; but she couldn't bring herself to accept the lie. Wood, except when wounded or cornered, is the most amiable creature in the Oregon woods, and it would give her almost a sense of security to have him waddling along behind her. The wolves and cougar, remembering the arms of Wood, would not be nearly so curious. But unfortunately, the black bear had never done such a thing in the memory of man, and if he had, he would have made six times as much noise. He can go fairly softly when he is stalking, but when he is obliged to trot—as he would be obliged to do to keep up with a swift-walking human figure—he cracks twigs like a rolling log. She had the impression that the animal behind had been passing like smoke at first, but wasn't taking the trouble to do it now.

The sound was a soft pat-pat on the trail—sometimes entirely obliterated but always recurring when she began to believe that she had only fancied its presence. Sometimes a twig, rain-soaked though it was, cracked beneath a heavy foot, and again and again she heard the brush crushing and rustling as something passed through. Sometimes, when the trail was covered with soft pine needles, it was practically indistinguishable.

The animal was approximately one hundred feet behind. It wasn't a wolf, she thought. The wolves ran in packs this season, and except in winter were more afraid of human beings than any other living creature. It wasn't a lynx—one of those curiosity-devoured little felines that will mew all day on a trail and never dare come near. It was much too large for a lynx. Its feet fell too solidly. There were no dogs in the mountains to follow at heel; and she had no desire whatever to meet Shag, the faithful hybrid that used to be her guardian in the hills. For Shag had gone to his well-deserved rest several seasons before. Two other possibilities remained. One was that this follower was a human being, the other that it was a cougar.

Ordinarily a human being is much more potentially dangerous to a woman in the hills at night than a cougar. A cougar is an abject coward and some men are not. But Snowbird felt herself entirely capable of handling any human foes. They would have no advantage over her; they would have no purpose in killing from ambush; and she trusted to her own marksmanship implicitly. While it is extremely difficult thing to shoot at a cougar leaping from the thicket, a tall man standing on a trail presents an easy target. Besides, she had a vague sense of discomfort that if this animal were a cougar, he wasn't acting true to form. He was altogether too bold.

The animal on the trail behind her was taking no care at all to go silently. He was simply pit-patting along, wholly at his ease. He acted as if the fear that men have instilled in his breed was somehow missing. And that is why she instinctively tried to hurry on the trail.

The step kept sure. For a long mile, up a barren ridge, she heard every step it made. Then, as the brush closed deeper around her, she couldn't hear it at all.

She hurried on, straining to the silence. Nor the sound was stopped. Could it be that the animal had feared at last, had turned from her trail? And then for the first time a gasp that was not greatly different from a despairing sob caught at her throat. She heard the steps again, and they were in the thicket just beside her.

* * * * * * *

Two hours before Snowbird had left the house, on her long tramp to the ranger station, Dan had started home. He hadn't shot until sunset, as he had planned.

He rode one of Lennox's cattle ponies, the only piece of horse-flesh that Bill had not taken to the valleys when he had driven down the live stock. She was a pretty bay, a spirited, high-bred mare that could whip about on her hind legs at the touch of the rein on her neck. She made good time along the trail. And an hour before sunset he passed the only human habitation between the marsh and Lennox's house—the cabin that had been recently occupied by Landy Hildreth.

He glanced at the place as he passed and saw that it was deserted. No smell of wood smoke remained in the air. Evidently Landy had gone down to the settlements with his precious testimony in regard to the arson ring. Yet it was curious that no word had been heard of him. As far as Dan knew, neither the courts nor the forest service had taken action.

She Heard the Steps Again.

He hurried on, four miles farther. The trail entered the heavy thickets, and he had to ride slowly. It was as wild a section as could be found on the whole Divide. And just as he came to a little cleared space, three strange, dark birds flung up on wide-spreading wings.

He knew them at once. All mountaineers come to know them before their days are done. They were the buzzards, the followers of the dead. And what they were doing in the thicket just beside the trail, Dan did not dare to think.

Of course they might be feeding on the body of a deer, mortally wounded by some hunter. He resolved to ride by without investigating. He glanced up. The buzzards were hovering in the sky, evidently waiting for him to pass. Then, mostly to relieve a curious sense of discomfort in his own mind, he stopped his horse and dismounted.

The twilight had started to fall, and already its first grayness had begun to soften the harder lines of forest and hill. And after his first glance at the curious white heap beside the trail, he was extremely glad that it had. But there was no chance to mistake the thing. The elements and much more terrible agents had each wrought their change, yet there was grisly evidence in plenty to show what had occurred. Dan didn't doubt for an instant but that it was the skeleton of Landy Hildreth.

He forced himself to go nearer. The buzzards were almost done, and one white bone from the shoulder gave unmistakable evidence of the passage of a bullet. What had happened thereafter, he could only guess.

He got back quickly on his horse. He understood, now, why nothing had been heard of the evidence that Landy Hildreth was to turn over to the courts as to the activities of the arson ring. Some one—probably Bert Cranston himself—had been waiting on the trail. Others had come thereafter. And his lips set in his resolve to let this murder measure in the debt he had to pay Cranston.

The Lennox house seemed very silent when, almost an hour later, he turned his horse into the corral. He had rather hoped that Snowbird would be at the door to meet him. The darkness had just fallen, and all the lamps were lighted. He strode into the living room, warming his hands an instant beside the fireplace. The fire needed fuel. It had evidently been neglected for nearly an hour.

Then he called Snowbird. His voice echoed in the silent room, unanswered. He called again, then went to look for her. At the door of the dining room he found the note that she had left for him.

It told, very simply and plainly, that her father lay injured in his bed, and he was to remain and do what he could for him. She had gone for help to the ranger station.

He leaped through the rooms to Lennox's door, then went in on tiptoe. And the first thing he saw when he opened the door was the grizzled man's gray face on the pillow.

"You're home early, Dan," he said. "How many did you get?"

It was entirely characteristic. Shaggy old Wood is too proud to howl over the wounds that lay him low, and this gray old bear on the bed had partaken of his spirit.

"Good Lord," Dan answered. "How badly are you hurt?"

"Not so bad but that I'm sorry that Snowbird has gone drifting twelve miles over the hills for help. It's dark as pitch."

And it was. Dan could scarcely make out the outline of the somber ridges against the sky.

They talked on, and their subject was whether Dan should remain to take care of Lennox or whether he should attempt to overtake Snowbird with the horse. Of course the girl had ordered him to stay. Lennox, on the other hand, said that Dan could not help him in the least, and desired him to follow the girl.

"I'm not often anxious about her" he said slowly. "But it is a long walk through the wildest part of the Divide, Some way—I can't bar accidents tonight. I don't like to think of her on those mountains alone."

And remembering what had lain beside the trail, Dan felt the same. He had heard, long ago, that any animal that once tasted human flesh loses its fear of men and is never to be trusted again. Some wild animal that still hunted the ridges had, in the last month, done just that thing. He left the room and walked softly to the door.

The night lay silent and mysterious over the Divide. He stood listening. The girl had started only an hour before, and it was unlikely that she could have traversed more than two miles of the steep trail in that time. Although the horse ordinarily did not climb a hill more swiftly than a human being, he didn't doubt but that he could overtake her before she went three miles farther. But where lay his duty—with the injured man in the house or with the daughter on her errand of mercy in the darkness?

Then the matter was decided for him. So faint that it only whispered at the dim, outer frontiers of hearing, a sound came pricking through the darkness. Only his months of listening to the faint sounds of the forest, and the incredible silence of the night enabled him to hear it at all. But he knew what it was. It was the report of a pistol. Snowbird had met an enemy in the darkness.

He called once to Lennox, snatched the shotgun that still stood where he had placed it in the corner of the room, and hastened to the corral. The mare whickered plaintively when he took her from her food.

* * * * *

When Snowbird first heard the step in the thickets beside her, she halted bravely and held her lantern high. She understood at last. The very extremity of the beams found a reflection in two very curious circles of greenish fire; a fire that was old upon the world before man ever rubbed two sticks together to strike a flame. Of course the dim rays had simply been reflected on the eyes of some great beast of prey.

She identified it at once. Only the eyes of the felines, with vertical pupils, have this identical greenish glare. The eyes of the wolves glow in the darkness, but the circles are usually bright points. Of course it was a cougar.

She didn't cry out again. Realizing at last the reality of her peril, her long training in the mountains came to her aid. That did not mean she was not truly and terribly afraid. The beast was hunting her. She couldn't doubt this fact. Curiosity might make a lion follow her, but it would never beget such a wild light of madness in his eyes as this she had just seen. She simply clamped down all her moral strength on her rising hysteria and looked her situation in the face. Her hand flew instinctively to her side, and the pistol leaped in the lantern light.

But the eyes had already blinked out before she could raise the weapon.

She Shot Twice.

She shot twice. The echoes roared back, unbelievably loud in the silence, and then abruptly died; and the only sound was a rustling of leaves as the cougar crouched. She sobbed once, then hurried on.

She was afraid to listen at first. She wanted to believe that her pistol fire would frighten the animal from her trail. She knew, under ordinary conditions, that it would. If he still followed, it could mean but one thing—that some unheard-of incident had occurred to destroy his fear of men. It would mean that he had knowingly set upon her trail and was hunting her with all the age-old remorselessness that is the code of the mountains.

For a little while all was silence. Then out of the bush the thickets suddenly crashed and shook on the opposite side of the trail. She dived blindly into the thicket. Then she caught herself with a sob. But two shells remained in her pistol, and they must be saved for the test.

Whispering to the cougar, remembering the lessons of his youth, turned from the trail when he had first heard Snowbird's step. He had crouched and let her pass. She was walking into the wind; and as she was at the closest point a message had blown back to him.

The hair went straight on his shoulders and along his spine. His blood, running cold an instant before from fear, made a great leap in his veins. A picture came in his dark mind: the chase for a deer when the moon had set, the stir of a living thing that broke twigs in the thickets, and the leap he had made. There had been blood, that night—the wildness and the madness and the exultation of the kill. Of course there had been terror first, but the terror had soon departed and left something lying warm and still in the thickets. It was the same game that walked his trail in front—game that died easily and yet, in a vague way he did not understand, the noblest game of all. It was living the wild, free passion and rapture.

All his training, all the instincts imbued in him by a thousand generations of cougars who knew this greatest fear, were simply obliterated by the sudden violence of his hunting-madness. He had tasted this blood once, and it could never be forgotten. The flame leaped in his eyes. And then he began the stalk.

A cougar, trying to creep silently on its prey, does not move quickly. It simply steals, as a serpent steals through the grass. Whisperfoot stalked for a period of five minutes, to learn that the prey was farther away from him at every step.

He trotted forward until he came close, and again he stalked. Again he found, after a few minutes of silent creeping through the thickets, that he had lost distance. Evidently game did not feed slowly, like the deer. It was to be a chase, then. Again he trotted within one hundred feet of the girl.

Three times more he tried to stalk before he finally gave it up altogether. This game was like the porcupine—simply to be chased down and taken. And in the case of all animals that hunt their game by overtaking it, there was no longer any occasion for going silently. The thing to do was to come close and spring from the trail behind.

Though the fear was mostly gone, the cougar retained enough of that caution that most wild animals exhibit when hunting a new game, that he didn't attempt to strike Snowbird down at once. But as the chase went on, his passion grew upon him. Ever he crept nearer. And at last he sprang full into the thickets beside her.

At that instant she had shot for the first time. Because the light had left his eyes before she could find aim, both shots had been clean misses. And terrible as the reports were, he was too engrossed in the chase to be frightened away by mere sound. This was the cry the man-pack always made—these sudden, startling sounds in the silence. But he felt no pain. He crouched a moment, shivering. Then he bounded on again.

The third shot was a miss too: in fact, there had been no chance for a hit. A sound in the darkness is as unreliable a target as can possibly be imagined. And it didn't frighten him as much as the others. He waited, crouching, and the girl started on.

She was making other sounds now—queer, whimpering sounds not greatly different from the bleat that the fawn utters when it dies. It was a fear-sound, and if there is one emotion with which the wild beasts are acquainted, in all its phases, it is fear. She was afraid of him, then, and that meant he need no longer be in the least afraid of her. His skin began to twitch all over with that terrible madness and passion of the flesh-hunters.

This game was like the deer, and the thing to do was lie in wait. There was only one trail. He wasn't afraid of losing her in the darkness. She was neither fleet like the deer nor courageous like Woof the bear. He had only to wait and leap from the darkness when she passed.

* * * * *

When Dan Failing, riding like mad over the mountain trail, heard the third shot from Snowbird's pistol, he felt that one of the debts he owed had come due at last. He seemed to know, as the darkness pressed around him, that he was to be tried in the fire. And the horse staggered beneath him as he tried to hasten.

He showed no mercy to his mount. Horse-flesh isn't made for carrying a heavy man over such a trail as this, and she was red-nostrilled and lathered before half a mile had been covered. He made her leap up the rocks, and on fairly level stretches he loosed the reins and lashed her into a gallop. Only a mountain horse could have stood that test. He gave no thought to his own safety. His courage was at the test, and no risk of his own life must interfere with his attempt to save Snowbird from the danger that threatened her. He didn't know when the horse would fall with him and precipitate him down a precipice, and he was perfectly aware that to crash into a low-hanging limb of one of the great trees beside the trail would probably crush his skull. But he took the chance. And before the ride was done he found himself pleading with the horse, even as he lashed her sides with his whip.

The lesser forest creatures sprang from his trail; and once the mare leaped high to miss a dark shadow that crossed in front. As she caught her stride, Dan heard a squeal and a rattle of quills that identified the creature as a porcupine.

By now he had passed the first of the worst grades, coming out upon a long, easy slope of open forest. Again he urged his horse, leaving to her keen senses alone the chosing of the path between the great trees.

Then he heard Snowbird fire for the fourth time; and he knew that he had almost overtaken her. The report seemed to smash the air. And he lashed his horse into the fastest, run she knew—a wild, sobbing figure in the darkness.

"She's only got one shot more," he said. He knew how many bullets her pistol carried; and the danger—whatever it was—must be just at hand. Underbrush cracked beneath him. And then the horse drew up with a jerk that almost hurled him from the saddle.

He lashed at her in vain. She was not afraid in the darkness and the rocks of the trail, but some Terror in the woods in front had in an instant broken his control over her. She reared, snorting; then danced in an impotent circle. Meanwhile, precious seconds were fleeing.

He understood now. The horse stood still, shivering beneath him, but would not advance a step. The silence deepened. Somewhere in the darkness before him a great cougar was waiting by the trail, and Snowbird, hoping for the moment that it had given up the chase, was hastening through the shadows squarely into its ambush.

Whisperfoot crouched lower: and again his long serpent of a tail began the little vertical motion that always precedes his leap. He had not forgotten the wild rapture of that moment he had inadvertently sprung on Landy Hildreth—or how, after his terror had died, he had come creeping back. He hunted his own way, waiting on the trail; and his madness was at its height. He was not just Whisperfoot the coward, that runs at the shadow of a tall form in the thickets. The consummation was complete, and that single experience of a month before had made of him a hunter of men. His muscles set for the leap.

So intent was he that his keen senses didn't detect the fact that there was a curious echo to the girl's footsteps. Dan Failing had slipped down from his terrified horse and was running up the trail behind her, praying that he could be in time.

Snowbird heard the pat, pat of his feet; but at first she did not dare to hope that aid had come to her. She had thought of Dan as on the far-away marshes; and her father, the only other living occupant of this part of the Divide, might even now be lying dead in his house. In her terror, she had lost all power of interpretation of events. The most likelihood be the cougar's mate, or even the wolf pack, jealous of his game. Sobbing, she hurried on into Whisperfoot's ambush.

Then she heard a voice, and it seemed to be calling to her. "Snowbird—I'm coming, Snowbird," a man's strong voice was shouting. She whirled with a sob of thankfulness.

At that instant the cougar sprang.

Terrified though she was, Snowbird's reflexes had kept sure and true. Even as the great cat leaped, a long, lithe shadow out of the shadow, her finger pressed back against the trigger of her pistol. She had been carrying her gun in front of her, and she fired it, this last time, with no conscious effort. It was just a last instinctive effort to defend herself.

One other element affected the issue. She had whirled to answer Dan's cry just as the cougar left the ground. But she had still been in range. The only effect was to lessen, in some degree, the accuracy of the spring. The bullet entered the beast in mid-air: but even if it had reached its heart, the momentum of the attack was too great to be completely overcome. Snowbird only knew that some vast, resistless power was upon her, and that the darkness seemed to roar and explode about her.

Hurled to her face in the trail, she did not see the cougar sprawl on the earth beside her. Dan's flame in the lantern almost flicked out as it fell from her hand, then flashed up and down, from the deepest gloom to a vivid glare with something of the effect of lightning flickering in the sky. Nor did she hear the first frenzied thrashing of the wounded animal. Kindly unconsciousness had fallen, obscuring this and also the sight of the great cat, in the agony of its wound, the broken shoulder and bared claws across the pine needles toward her defenseless body.

But the terrible fangs were never to know her white flesh. Some one was shouting to her. There was a no chance to shoot: Whisperfoot and the girl were too near together for that. But one course remained; and there was not even time to count the cost. In this most terrible moment of Dan Failing's life, there was not even an instant's hesitation. He did not know that Whisperfoot was wounded. He saw the beast creeping forward in the weird dancing light of the fallen lantern, and he only knew that his flesh, not hers, must resist its rending talons. Nothing else mattered. No other consideration could come between.

It was the test; and Dan's instincts prompted coolly and well. He leaped with all his strength. The cougar bounded into his arms, not upon the prone body of the girl. And she opened her eyes to hear a curious thrashing in the pine needles, a strange grim battle that, as the lantern flashed out, was hidden in the darkness.

And that battle, in the far reaches of the Divide, passed into a legend. It was the tale of how Dan Failing, his gun knocked from his hands as he met the cougar's leap, with his own unaided arms kept the life-giving breath from the animal's lungs and killed him in the pine needles. Claw and fang and the frenzy of death could not matter at all.

Thus Failing established before all men his right to the name he bore. And thus he paid one of his debts—life for a life, as the code of the forest has always decreed—and in the fire of danger and pain his metal was tried and proven.

CHAPTER I.

The Lennox home, in the wilderness of the Umpqua Divide, looked rather like an emergency hospital for the first few days after Dan's fight with Whisperfoot. Its old sounds of laughter and talk were almost entirely lacking. Two injured men and a girl recovering from a nervous collapse do not tend toward cheer.

But the natural sturdiness of all three quickly came to their aid. Of course Lennox had been severely injured by the falling log, and many weeks would pass before he would be able to walk again. He could sit up for short periods, however; had the partial use of one arm; and could propel himself—after the first few weeks—at a small's pace through the rooms in a rude wheel chair that Bill's ingenuity had contrived. The great livid scratches that Dan bore on his body quickly began to heal; and before a week was done he began to venture forth on the hills again. Snowbird had remained in bed for three days; then she had hopped out one bright afternoon, swearing never to go back into it again. Evidently the crisp, fall air of the mountains had been a nerve tonic for them all.

Of course there had been medical attention. A doctor and a nurse had motored up the day after the accident; the physician had set the bones and departed, and the nurse remained for a week, to see the grizzled mountaineer well on the way of convalescence. But it was an anxious wait, and Lennox's car was kept constantly in readiness to speed her away in case the snows should start. At last she had left him in Snowbird's hands, and Bill had driven her back to the settlements in his father's car. The die was now cast as to whether or not Dan and the remainder of the family should winter in the mountain. The snow clouds deepened every day, the frost was ever heavier in the dawns, and the road would surely remain open only a few days more.

Once more the three seemingly had the Divide all to themselves. Bert Cranston had evidently deserted his cabin and was working a trap-line on the Umpqua side. The rangers left the little station, all dangers of fire past, and went down to their offices in the federal building of one of the little cities below. Because he was worse than useless in the deep snows that were sure to come, one of the ranch hands that had driven up with Bill rode away to the valleys the last of the live stock—the horse that Dan had ridden to Snowbird's defense.

Nothing had been heard of Landy Hildreth, who used to live on the trail to the marsh, and both Lennox and his daughter wondered why. There were also certain officials who had begun to be curious. As yet, Dan had told no one of the arson ring he had made on his return from hunting. And he would have found it an extremely difficult fact to explain.

It all went back to those inner springs of motive that few men can ever clearly enough within themselves to recognize. Even the first day, when he lay burning from his wounds, he worked out his own explanation in regard to the murder mystery. He regard to the murder mystery. He hadn't the slightest doubt but that Cranston had killed Hildreth to prevent his testimony from reaching the courts below. Of course, any other member of the arson ring of hillmen might have been the murderer; yet Dan was inclined to believe that Cranston, the leader of the gang, usually preferred to do such dangerous work as this himself. If it were true, somewhere on that tree-clad ridge close would be left, Moreover, it was wholly possible that the written testimony Hildreth must have gathered had never been found or destroyed. Dan didn't want the aid of the courts to find these clues. He wanted to work out the case himself. It resolved itself into a simple matter of vengeance: Dan had his debt to pay, and he wanted to bring Cranston to ruin by his own hand alone.

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" Made Her Well, Strong and Vigorous

MADAME ARTHUR BEAUCHER

205 Cartier St., Montreal.

"I suffered terribly from Constipation and Dyspepsia for many years. I felt pains after eating and had gas, constant headache, and was unable to sleep at night. I was getting so thin that I was frightened and saw several physicians who, however, did not seem able to help me.

As last a friend advised me to take "Fruit-a-tives". I did so and soon I felt some relief. I continued with "Fruit-a-tives" and in a short time, the Constipation was banished, I felt no more pains or headache or the disagreeable sensations that follow dyspepsia. Now I am well, strong and vigorous."

CASTORIA

Fletcher's Castoria is strictly a remedy for Infants and Children. Foods are specially prepared for babies. A baby's medicine is even more essential for Baby. Remedies primarily prepared for grown-ups are not interchangeable. It was the need of a remedy for the common ailments of Infants and Children that brought Castoria before the public after years of research, and no claim has been made for it that its use for over 30 years has not proven.

What is CASTORIA?

Castoria is a harmless substitute for Castor Oil, Paregoric, Drops and Soothing Syrups. It is pleasant. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other narcotic substance. Its age is its guarantee. For more than thirty years it has been in constant use for the relief of Constipation, Flatulency, Wind Colic and Diarrhoea; allaying Feverishness arising therefrom, and by regulating the Stomach and Bowels, aids the assimilation of Food; giving healthy and natural sleep. ## Brings the Farm to Town

NOW that he can order it at once by Long Distance from his favorite dealer in village, town, or city, nothing is too good for the farmer.

"You advertised a special sale on phonographs in to-day's paper. Ship me one"—he telephones.

Within the same convenient radius of your store are scores of thrifty housewives who would be pleased to have a merchant solicit their trade by Long Distance. Even if a sale does not result, you have advertised your business in a very effective way. They will probably call when they come to town, or order from your advertising. It's human nature.

We know a tire dealer who called up 29 strangers by Long Distance and sold tires to 8 of them. A follow-up letter or personal call later brought nearly all the others to his store.

Don't let your telephone idle. Long Distance can bring suburban prospects within sound of your voice. Turn it into a salesman, and keep it busy. Every other means of communication is substitute for the voice —the voice is YOU.

MAKING POULTRY PAY

IT IS WISE TO DISTRIBUTE SALE OF BIRDS.

Best Prices Are Received for Hens In Spring of Year, So That It Is Good Plan to Dispose of Extra Birds as Soon as the Yield of Egg Commences to Drop Off.

Distribute the sale of marketable birds over as many of the twelve months as possible. Sell when the price is good and the birds ready. As far as possible, get out of the habit of marketing everything in the fall of the year. Watch the markets and carry your birds ready when you can get the prices.

The best prices are received for hens in the spring of the year. A good plan is to cull out all the hens you do not intend to keep over for breeding purposes another year and sell as soon as the egg yield drops. This will occur after the breeding season is over and usually along about the last of July for the poorer ones, the better layers a little bit later.

Whether these birds should be killed before selling, will depend upon the demand. In some cities, a better price is paid for the live bird than for the dressed. The killing, therefore, will depend upon the prices paid.

When trap-nesting is followed the matter is simple, for the non-producers can be picked out at any time. Where trap-nests are not used, the selection is made much more convenient if leg bands are used to distinguish the hens from the pullets, and the early-lays' pullets from the later ones. With these marks the hens and the low-producing pullets can be disposed of. The aim should be to keep over the summer months only the birds that are paying well for their keep and that are to be kept for breeding purposes the next spring.

In the case of Leghorns or other light breeds, it may pay to keep all pullets over the summer, but this must be determined by the number of eggs they are laying; as soon after their egg production comes below their cost of keep, even Leghorns should be disposed of.

Broilers are chickens weighing not over four or five pounds to the pair. In recent years the demand and the prices have risen for broilers and now for those who are close to a good broiler market it pays to sell their cockerels as broilers, rather than hold them until fall and sell them as roasters. It is a good plan, therefore, to get rid of as many cockerels as you intend to sell during the broiler stage, if the price available at that time makes it worth while, and usually it does. The selling of broilers at this time of the year cuts down on the feed bill and leaves more room for the pullets to mature.

The only time to sell market ducks is when they are about ten weeks of age and can be marketed under the trade name of "green ducks." Usually where there is a demand for this class of ducks they will bring a bigger price per bird at this stage than at any later stage, and the cost of production is materially less.

In spite of the number that can sell broilers, the bulk of the cockerels will be sold as roosters weighing 4½ to 6 pounds in the fall. In disposing of roasters it pays to crate feed. The last pound of flesh is the cheapest part of the whole carcass and enhances the value of the entire bird. Do not dispose of any class of poultry stock without special feeding, and for the larger cockerels, especially, the crate feeding system is best.

Geese are becoming more popular each year and deserve more attention on the average farm than they have received. The grass feeding habit of the goose is an added reason for goose flesh being one of the cheapest poultry meats produced.

Turkeys continue to be our highest priced poultry flesh and no doubt will maintain this position for some time, for the ravages of blackhead each year seem to make it harder to produce turkeys. In marketing turkeys almost more than any other class of poultry meat, it is essential that they be well-fed. Turkeys cannot be too fat and in disposing of them keep in mind that turkeys are used for festival occasions. Have them ready, therefore, in plenty of time for Thanksgiving and Christmas, and do not leave the marketing of them too near the time at which they are required for eating.

For further details, write the Poultry Division, Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, Ont., for their bulletin No. 88, "Preparing Poultry Produce for Market."—F. C. Elford, Dominion Poultry Husbandman.

Striped Cucumber Beetles.

The best way to handle the striped cucumber beetle is by cleaning the garden in the fall of all forms of vegetation and making a bonfire of it. The adjacent plots to the garden should also be raked and the rubbish burned. In this way many species of insects will be killed that would otherwise live through the winter. Many small gardeners leave the garden cleaning until spring and then wonder at the numerous forms of insect life. One day of cleaning and burning in the fall saves several days of insect picking during the spring. Among the birds that have been eating the cucumber beetle on several occasions are the quail, English sparrow, wren, grosbek and oriole.

Succulent Feed Insurance.

The silo is the best feed insurance that can be provided. Even when seasons are favorable and there is plenty of rain it is a mighty good plan to fill the silo with green succulent feed and carry it over the next year, when a dry season may come and cause a shortage of both feeds and pasture.

Chopped Stuff.

A long ladder is a piece of farm equipment which will pay a good dividend in convenience.

Experiments at the Vineland Experimental Station have proven that until bearing age is reached light pruning only will give larger and earlier-bearing trees.

Judging the productive capacity of an cow from any one point in her conformation is a very uncertain matter. There is little enough certainty when the whole conformation is considered.

Summing up all the experiments conducted by some 23 different experiment stations in the United States over a period of 15 years, silage has proven the most economic food for the production of stock and stock products.

Idle horses can very well subsist on hay and other fodder only, but, as a rule, it is the best policy to give them a small daily allowance of oats in addition to the fodder, which will maintain them in good thriving condition.

Many farmers and stock-raisers in the United States are being converted each year into sweet clover enthusiasts. It is not uncommon in that country to find sweet clover carrying more than one animal to the acre, without being pastured too closely.

World's Crops.

The International Institute of Agriculture estimates the yield of winter wheat in British India at 9,387 thousand metric tons, being 21 per cent. below last year, and 27 per cent. below the average. Definite estimates of area under wheat and rye, as regards Western and Central Europe and North Africa are available; this group of countries, representing 45 per cent. of the world's average yield of wheat, has an area of 49,003 thousand acres, or 103 per cent. of last year's area, while the area under rye is 15,213 thousand acres, or 98 per cent. of that in 1920. The cereal crop condition in this group of countries is generally good.

Fungus.

If it were not for an ever-present fungus disease, which is a powerful natural enemy of the clover-leaf weevil, this pest would develop into a serious menace to one of our most important crops—clover.

Cutworm damage in Saskatchewan this season is reported to be much less than a year ago.

FALL BEE MANAGEMENT

Handling the Little Workers at the Summer's Close.

The Queen Is the Most Important Factor—Don't Keep a "Scrub"—Have an Abundance of Stores—Pastures Pay In Pork Production.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

Many beekeepers have visions of a two-hundred-pound crop of non-p per colony from many colonies, but it must be admitted that very few beekeepers really secure a crop of that proportion. This is due to poor seasons in many cases, but almost entirely due to negligence or lack of preparation on the part of the beekeeper.

It makes little difference how well colonies of bees are managed, unless certain conditions are met, so that the colonies can take advantage of the management bestowed on them. For instance, if the queen in the colony is failing or of poor quality, then it is an impossibility to secure a crop of honey from that colony. Again it is a waste of money and time to introduce a vigorous young queen to a colony of bees and then fail to give the queen an opportunity to lay a large number of eggs, so that the colony will go into winter headquarters in prime condition.

Beekeepers who have ten or more colonies of bees, know that certain colonies will return them crops three times as large as the average colony in the apiary. Yet few beekeepers appreciate that in most cases the larger crop of honey is due largely to the work of a good queen. There is just as much difference in the value of queen bees, as there is between scrub live stock and pure-bred live stock, and beekeepers can make few better investments than the securing of choice, young Italian queens to head the colonies. The very best time to re-queen is from the middle of July to the middle of August.

The giving of a young queen means young bees for winter, consequently less loss in winter and very much stronger colonies in the spring of the year, and unless the beekeeper can have strong colonies in time for the main honey flow, his colonies will return him but little profit that season. After the queen has been safely introduced, the beekeeper should be sure to give the colony sufficient room, both for egg laying and for the storage of any surplus honey which might be harvested. Sometimes one super is sufficient, while in some locations and seasons, two or more supers may be necessary. The beekeeper himself must be the judge, as he knows his location and the season and must be guided accordingly.

The introduction of a good vigorous Italian queen and the giving of room both for brood-rearing and honey storage will also be very valuable in the complete control of one of our most serious bee diseases of bees, viz., European foulbrood. With a vigorous Italian queen and an abundance of stores, it means strong colonies, and consequently European foulbrood will do no damage. It would pay the beekeeper to keep one-half the number of colonies ordinarily kept, and give these every opportunity to do good work, and if this is done, the total crop would be just as large as from twice the number of colonies poorly managed.

Italian queens can be secured from any reliable queen-breeder, full particulars of which can be obtained from the Provincial Apiarist, Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph.—F. Eric Miller, O. A. College, Guelph.

Pastures Pay In Pork Production.

"One of the best means of cutting the cost of producing pork," says H. Perrin, who is in charge of the hog section at Minnesota University Farm, "is to use good pasture and forage crops. This practice is advisable whether it be high in price or cheap; there is a decided saving in either case. Pigs getting green feed are more thrifty than those raised in dry lots, consequently gain faster and make pork at a lower cost.

Results obtained at the farm prove best and quickest gains. A short-sighted policy to neglect to grow good forage crops when pigs are being raised. Blue grass and similar pastures furnish good feed in the spring, but during summer are little better than an exercising ground. Some one crop, or more than one, should be grown to give fresh succulent green feed in summer and early fall. Dwarf Essex rape, alfalfa and red clover are the outstanding top notch forage crops in the corn belt. Of these rape is by far the most suitable for Minnesota conditions. The cost of seeding is low—about five pounds of seed per acre is an average quantity—and in favorable season the crop is ready to be pastured six weeks from sowing. If grain is fed in reasonable amounts an acre of rape will carry from twenty to thirty growing pigs through the season.

"White hogs, and sometimes black and red ones, blister when running in rape. There is nothing peculiar about this rape which causes blistering; the trouble results simply from the combination of moisture, transferred from the rape to the hog, and a hot sun. By keeping pigs out of the rape patch until the dew or rain has evaporated from the leaves of the plants, blistering can be prevented.

"Rape can be sown as early in the spring as the ground can be worked. Even a small patch in a feed lot will save grain in raising pigs."

Tomatoes are ripening, and it is necessary to apply small quantities of nitrate of soda around each plant to hasten them.

Hints for Summer Weather.

In hot weather, special care is necessary to prevent animals from being overheated by exposure to the sun, confinement where ventilation is bad, or overcrowding. The brooder should be under shelter, with good circulation of air around it, and the number of chicks should not be greater than it will accommodate comfortably under hot weather conditions.

COLOR IS USED IN DIZZY ARRAY

Brightest of Tints, Hitherto Unknown in Cottons, Planned for Summer Wear.

RAINBOW AIDS IN NEW IDEAS

Shades Are Combined in Profusion in All Frocks of the Spring Mode—Large and Small Hats.

Striking and unusual color combinations are appearing in spring and summer clothes. Fashions cannot remain stationary. It is all very well to talk about finding the most becoming style and adhering to it, observes a fashion authority, but we must have a change in dress as in everything else. If each woman held continuously to the type most becoming to her our clothes would become as uninteresting as man's. Individuality would disappear. We would not only lose interest in dress, but likewise lose interest in making ourselves appear at our best at all times.

The psychology of clothes is extremely interesting, and much deeper than is generally supposed. A growing tendency toward simplicity of cut in dress has been very marked. The simple styles are preferred to any others at the present time.

From among the numberless types that designers have attempted to launch in order to create a demand for something new, which always stimulates business, the woman who buys and wears eventually decides the fashions has unfalteringly chosen the straightline dress, with nothing new about it as far as silhouette is concerned.

Simple Silhouette in Lavish Colors.

There must inevitably come a day when this will pass from the foreground of fashions unless the history of clothes is to be absolutely revolutionized, but from all appearances that day is still in the distance.

Since dressmakers have been compelled by popular demand to hold a silhouette in vogue, for some time they have resorted to embroideries and very lavish trimmings in order to get new effects. They spared no effort to make these beautiful and alluring. Clothes were literally covered with them. But beautiful as these embroideries were, drawing their inspirations, as they did, from the art, both ancient and modern, of many nations, they ran a swift and brief course. Embroideries still are used, it is true, but not to cover entire garments, as they did last season.

Now, color is the thing. In the cotton dresses for the midsummer days the brightest of tints, hitherto unknown in cottons, are profuse. Street dresses must have color introduced in some more subtle way.

Just as collars were made exaggeratedly high to popularize the high collar by calling a great deal of attention to it, so color is applied in broad sweeps, even to some of the new street dresses, to bring its importance to the foreground. Many of the new dresses have been likened to court jester's costumes, half of one color and half of another.

Frocks in Contrasting Hues.

These will be shown in the great dressmaking establishment both here and in Paris, but they will be looked upon more as show pieces than as wearable models. They will, however, serve their purpose in drawing attention to bright bits of ornamentation in dresses hitherto somewhat somber in this respect, so that a very gay sash or a startling bit of embroidery on a street frock or suit will seem tame in comparison to them.

One of the most charming color combinations appears in a clever frock of a peculiar mauve tint trimmed with deep nattier blue—a lovely combination of color tones. The dress is of an extremely simple style with low waistline and blousing back panel. It buttons straight down the front. At the back the high collar is in a continuous line with the blouse panel. At the hem of the skirt panel there is a deep embroidery in nattier blue. A sash of the same blue in crepe de chine passes across the front of the dress only and falls at the left side in a single end and loop.

The frock of blue serge and black satin always will have a popular following. It is useful in every woman's wardrobe, and especially so if one cannot be the happy possessor of a great many costumes. Because it is always one of the best sellers it receives even more of the designer's and manufacturer's attention than the more exclusive novelties. This spring's satin and serge costumes show touches of heavy embroidery in black, red and silver. The embroidery is always massed in some way, as in the form of a vest or a collar and cuff trimming. It is never used in a number of different places on the frock as hitherto.

An Afternoon Frock Developed From Gray Crepe de Chine, a Sash of Apricot Satin and Embroidery of the Same Shade, Making a Most Charming Contrast.

Dress Featuring Combination of Blue Serge and Black Satin and a New Method of Applying Embroidery, the Latter Forming Entire Vest, Collar and Deep Cuffs.

Typical Examples of Spring Modes.

A new French dress of this type is of navy blue serge and black satin with heavy embroidery in black, bright red and silver gray. The blouse has the low waistline with girdle and body cut in one. The skirt drapery is formed of two handkerchief squares suspended from the sides and overlapping at the back and at the front. The embroideries are done in heavy peasant style, a solid work forming the high collar, cuffs and vest. The short, coat-fitting underskirt is of black satin.

A slight yet interesting variation of the chemise frock is obtained in another model of blue serge and black satin. There is a plain chemise dress of the blue serge cloth, with the sleeves cut in kimono style. This is worn over a plain black satin petticoat, and a rounding piece of the serge is cut out in front of the skirt to reveal the petticoat. This piece runs from the hem to about six inches below the waistline. This leaves the serge in deep girdle effect. Bulgarian embroidery is massed on the front of the overdress just below the waistline. Where the dress is cut away the edges are bound with black satin.

A new spring afternoon dress from Paris shows an unusually pleasing union of colors. It is developed in gray crepe de chine, and has an irregular embroidery design appearing on panels at the sides of the skirt, and surrounding open slashes in the front of the bodice.

A sash of apricot satin emerges at one side of the dress, as if the underbodice were made by wrapping the figure with the satin and leaving long ends free to tie in a bow on the outside of the dress. There is a novel half-low collar.

Subtle and beautiful color combinations are seen in advanced models of summer evening frocks. Many of the dresses themselves are of the simplest sort.

The design, intended for somewhat formal wear, is of an unusual shade of blue green silk. It consists of a straight skirt and long-waisted bodice. The color contrast is obtained through four tabs or panels of silver lace.

Real Class.

An angler, thinking his Highland boatman, was not treating him with the respect due to his station, said: "Look here, my good man, you don't seem to grasp who I am. Do you know that my family has been entitled to bear arms for the last three hundred years?"

"That's nothing!" was the reply. "My ancestors have been entitled to bare legs for the last three thousand years."

Alberta's Population.

Alberta's population is put at 620,000 by the Provincial Vital Statistics Branch. The figure has been made upon the basis of the births and deaths during the year 1920.

Births in the province in 1920 numbered 16,565, a net increase of 2,435 over those of 1919.

Bibles Translated.

Over 500,000,000 Bibles, translated into 528 different languages, have been distributed by the British and Foreign Bible Society. Thibet, Nepaul, Abyssinia, parts of Arabia, and Afghanistan are still closed to the society.

TEA-DINNER GOWN

Garment Many Women Have Wished For but Never Found.

Outfit Has Made Most Favorable Impression Because of Becomingness, Smartness and Comfort.

A new dress creation comes to us from New York—the "tea-dinner gown." Just the garment which many a woman has wished for and has never found. A new firm of costumers solved the problem and put such a gown on the market.

The "tea-dinner gown" has made a great hit because of its smartness, becomingness and great comfort—the three requisites every well-dressed woman demands. The "tea-dinner gown" is true to name. It is worn for tea in one's own home and is kept on for dinner, if dinner is an informal affair. The American woman will be quick to appreciate this advantage, for at one time or another every woman has had an awkward rush to change from an afternoon to dinner dress. Be that as it may, the gown, which has absolutely has no resemblance to the old-fashioned "tea gown" (husbands will not think you in negligee), where lace and ribbons were fluttering adornments. Effect is the new gown's by color, wonderful combinations of color, line and materials.

There are three types of "tea-dinner gowns." One of all chiffon georgette, the handsome velvet severely plain, and the combination of a velvet coat worn over a chiffon slip, fashioned very much on straight lines. A gown which has been greatly admired was Chinese red chiffon with a coat of jade-green chiffon velvet, lined with the chiffon—a combination of colors marvelously becoming and effective and a delightfully comfortable garment.

Tailleur of Black Velvet, Showing New Loose Coat in Vogue This Season.

Some of the lovely gowns in chiffon would suggest to one a Maxfield Parish picture, with its color, brilliant—yet soft and harmonious—while the "tea-dinner gown," which makes the older woman look dignified or the younger woman charming, is one designed in black chiffon velvet with long straight lines and no trimming.

THERE IS NO COLOR LIMIT

No Hard and Fast Rules Before and After Thirty in the Present Age.

Colors which have so much to do with one's appearance are now no longer chosen according to age, as our mothers and grandmothers were prone to do. There is no color limit, no hard and fast rules before and after thirty in this age. The necessary thing is to know your type and then to know the colors as applied to yourself.

A girl with delicate coloring and transparent skin should choose tints rather than colors lest she detract from the delicacy of her features and complexion. Yellows, ochre and greens call for a very clear skin, whereas red and its derivatives lend a glow that is flattering, as do also the warmer shades of purple.

The eternal blue and green color scheme for the red-haired girl has at last given way to a range of colors in perfect harmony with or strongly contrasting, running the gamut from a pale and faint pink to brilliant orange, which well offsets the rare coloring of hair, which the majority of us, alas, are not favored with.

To Freshen a Hat.

If you have a hat from last year that is still in shape but rather faded, get it out, purchase some raffia and embroider it in one or two, or even more, contrasting colors. This is particularly effective upon a hat of silk or satin, and though the embroidery only consists of long and short stitches, with the colors blended, the effect will be a good one.

Pudding Sauce.

A pudding sauce is made with three tablespoonfuls each of milk, orange marmalade and marshmallow cream.

A Man is just as Young and Strong as his Blood

No man can fight the battles of life and hold his own if his blood is not pure, for rich, red blood is what strength is based upon. When you see a strong, vigorous man, who never knows when he is licked, you may wager that such a man has coursing through his veins rich, red blood. Many people have thin, pale blood. They are weak, tire easily, become discouraged quickly, and sometimes feel like giving up the struggle. Such folks need Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which is sold by druggists in liquid or tablet form.

Send 10 cents to Doctor Pierce's Invalids' Hotel in Buffalo, N. Y., for a trial package of the tablets.

NIAGARA FALLS, ONT.—"I have used Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery at times for the past three years with wonderful results, and I take great pleasure in saying a word to boost the cause of 'Freedom from Illness.' I am a pressman by occupation, which is quite fatiguing and injurious to the system, but since taking the 'Discovery' have no drawback for me. Three cheers for Doctor Pierce's medicine!"—WILLIAM H. DEMPSEY, JR., 32 Bridge Street.

NEW NORTHERN CARIBOU.

"Rangifer McGuirei" Was Found In Yukon Territory.

Many sportsmen have gone far, risked much and toiled long in the procuring of rare animals and accessories for habitat groups. J. A. McGuire is editor of the magazine Outdoor Life. Some of his interest in animals in the open is the constructive work he is doing in the making of museum groups. He hunted and killed some very large specimens of the silver tip grizzly bears that now form a notable feature of his home museum in Denver, Col. It was, no doubt, the success of this group that led him to plan for the trip over the Alaska-Yukon game trails in quest of big game.

When the party of collectors invaded the White River District of Yukon Territory and Alaska in search of specimens they did not expect to discover a new and hitherto unclassed species of caribou roaming that vast domain. But such was the result of their trip, for when the trophies were brought back and examined by J. D. Figgins, director of the Colorado Museum of Natural History, they found to their joy that the caribou specimens were totally unlike the rangifer osborni or rangifer stonei, the only two formerly accepted and classified species of the North. The new species, rangifer meguirei, so called in honor of the expedition's leader, have many different characteristics when compared with the osborni type of caribou. These characteristics are as follows:

There is an absence of white around the eye, black darker than legs; tip of nose and lower lip silvery white; between the jaws, entire throat and sides of neck and over shoulders varying from brownish gray in calves of the year to white in fully mature examples; backs of ears and along the posterior portion of the head and neck light grayish, being gradually displaced by white or yellowish gray toward the shoulders; a broad band of grayish buff or buffy white extending diagonally from the color of the shoulders to the region of the elbow and along the sides to the flank. (This last named characters vary with the age of the animal, but are pronounced in all examples from a calf of the year to fully adult specimens—the markings on the shoulders and sides being the most prominent in young animals, the white neck being acquired upon full development.) A band of dark brown separating light stripe on sides from white of the flank.

The hoofs are small; antlers, differing in type when compared with osborni and stonei, notably in the length of single brow tine, and the formation of the first branch. Skull, excessive anterior cleft and flattening of nasals; length and backward curvature of the paroccipital processes.

While animals of this new species breed in limited numbers in the vicinity of the type locality, they represent, according to Mr. McGuire, but a small percentage of those that appear from the north and northwest during September and October, probably the movement is an extension of the migration of caribou which occurs in the region of Fairbanks; but until there is positive evidence of this, the range of meguirei may be designated as the vicinity of the Alaska-Yukon boundary from the base of Mount St. Elias northward.

USE COLORS IN HAIR NETS

Hair Dresser Advises Certain Shades to Add Colorful Glints to the Tresses.

A well-known hairdresser advises the use of hairnets of certain colors to add colorful glints to the hair.

If the hair is a dull mouse color and the eyes are blue, use a gold-yellow hairnet.

If the eyes are brown, a red net should be tried.

Of course, the very best nets must be purchased, and not those of artificial hair, poorly colored.

If gray hair is inclined to be yellow, a very fine, dark blue hair net, worn over the coiffure, will take all tinge of yellow out of it.

As blue hairnets cannot be purchased, a white one will have to be dyed in one of the bluings prepared.

The net should be of the best quality so as to give the right effect.

Plain Talks - No. 5

AND WE VOTED YES.

'Twas a balmy summer's evening,
And a goodly crowd was there
Such dope we got in days gone by,
But now it seems threadbare.
No more gin rickey's can we have,
Or highballs when we chose,
Since the old bartender lost his job,
We've kissed them fond adieus.
The sawdust and the polished rail
Departed with a shock;
And Bums in back lanes whisper now,
Do you want to buy a crock?

Dear People:

No doubt you will be a little surprised at us for our fast methods of advertising Especially our old customers, for they know us well, and expect something out of the ordinary. We must apologize for repitition, as business is always more than brisk at this season and calls for our efforts so urgent that we scarcely find time to eat. Now! there is a reason for our success and let us briefly state we mean to stick to our ideals. Our leather and workmanship is, and always will be, of the very best, we work on a small margin and give satisfaction to all. As you are aware there are several grades of leather and it is possible to have boots fixed at very low cost, but not so with us, we handle nothing inferior in quality and are best by far, so compare our work with others and be convinced. Our prompt service is also an item worthy of mention for we do everything with neatness and dispatch. All work left in the morning will be had same evening. Some good second hand boots for sale cheap. We have the unbreakable shoe laces. Rubber heels on in a few minutes.

A clever swindle was put over in one of the Napanee stores on Saturday. A man entered the store and asked the lady to change a ten dollar American bill. She clerk went to the cash register and got change for ten dollars and laid it on the counter. The man picked up the ten dollars, at the same time, throwing down a folded bill. The clerk opened the bill and found a one dollar Canadian bill, but the man with the change had immediately disappeared.

On Tuesday, July 19th, a quiet wedding was solemnized at the Free Methodist parsonage, Colborne street, Kingston, when Jessie Mae, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Babcock, Odessa, was united in marriage to Harold J. Redmond, B.A., son of Mr. and Mrs. J. Redmond, Kingston. The ceremony was performed by Rev. E. Snyder. After, the happy couple left on the 1.45 p.m. train for Toronto and Niagara Falls. On their return they will reside in Kingston.

Perhaps the best argument for home town buying is contained in the story of the doctor who had just moved to a new field. Shortly after his arrival, he heard from a certain firm in a city some thousand miles away. They wrote: "For some time we have missed your name from its place on our books. We would be delighted to have your orders again placed with us." The doctor had been having his own troubles in the new town, but his reply did not indicate them. He replied: "For some time I have missed your name from its place on my books. I would be delighted to again have your patronage."
